Italian Killed, Warship Sped By Mussolini To Barcelona

Rome Claims Loyalists Slew Workingman; City Inflamed.

Delay by Germany Arouses War Fear

Each Faction in Spain Declares Outsiders Aid the Other.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Lisbon (Friday), Sept. 4.—Dangerous threat of new international complications developed today in the Spanish civil war. Nervous European chancellories watched for the outcome of these incidents:

1. The Italian heavy cruiser Pola steamed toward Barcelona to protect Italian subjects, one of whom was executed by a loyalist firing squad. The Pola, first of several Italian warships which will be sent to Spanish waters, reportedly carried a landing party of infantrymen and Black Shirts, in full fighting equipment.

2. Twenty French citizens were wounded by rebel gunfire when shrapnel and bullets from the attack on Irun carried across the frontier. French authorities protested.

3. The insurgent Spanish government at Burgos protested formally against alleged French aid to loyalist forces.

4. Loyalists charged Italian fighting planes were landed at Vigo, for use by Fascist rebels.

5. An eyewitness account by a United Press staff correspondent describing the bodies of two priests who had been crucified aroused Catholics all over the world.

Bloody fighting continued on four fronts.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Sept. 3.—The 10,000-ton cruiser Pola sailed tonight from Gaeta to Barcelona "to give added protection to Italians there."

The Pola is one of Italy's finest war vessels.

The ship was to join an Italian war vessel already at Barcelona.

[The Pola carried a landing party of 100 infantrymen and 25 Black Shirts with full fighting equipment, the United Press reported.—Editor's note.]

The Italian government was aroused by reports earlier in the day that an Italian workman in Barcelona had been killed by Spanish Socialist government forces and had indicated reinforcements might be sent to "protect" Italians in the Spanish city.

The Pola, during naval maneuvers, frequently flew Premier Mussolini's flag.

It should arrive in Barcelona early Saturday.

Well informed sources did not say whether or how soon other reinforcements would be sent to Barcelona.

The sentiment of Fascist Italy flared up menacingly against the Spanish Socialist government because of the reported killing of the Italian workman at Barcelona.

The workman, whose name was given as Umberto Fazzalenda, father of seven children, was said to have been killed by government fighting men because they found religious images in his house.

An official communique today said "the Italian consul general at Barcelona made repeated and energetic protests, but the present state of affairs is such in Spain that protests are no longer sufficient."

France Protests to Rebels

Henraye, France, Sept. 3 (AP).—France protested to the Spanish rebel junta against "violation of French territory by insurgent gunfire."

With the most violent fighting raging for days in the Irun sector just across the Bidassoa River from France, bullets, bombs and shells have fallen daily on French soil and several persons on the French side of the narrow stream have been wounded.

Charles Mathieu, president of the department of the Passes-Pyrenees, said representations had been made at Dancharinea, rebel frontier post.

Mathieu said rebel officials assured French representatives Gen. Emilio Mola had given personal instructions to his officers for absolute respect of French territory.

Outside Rebel Aid Claimed.

Madrid, Sept. 3 (AP).—"Sensational revelations" concerning foreign aid to the Spanish rebels were promised at an early date by the Madrid government tonight.

The government said documents

Newsreel Faked Drought Picture, 'Victims' Declare

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fargo, N. Dak., Sept. 3.—If you chance to see a newsreel shot of a "North Dakota family fleeing from the drought," look closely to see if it's the Stoddarts of Stutsman County. If it is, it's a fake.

The Stoddarts are at home on their farm near Jamestown, where they lived for more than 30 years. They expect to go on living there.

How they crashed the newsreel is what the Fargo Forum today declared "a classic in the annals of phony stories and phony pictures of North Dakota in 1936, a champion in a long parade of drought fakes."

Early in July, two newsreel men drove to the Stoddart farm and asked permission to take "some pictures for the movies." The Stoddarts consented, although they told the Fargo Forum today they thought the idea sort of "goofy." What the camera men wanted them to do was to load some household goods, a couple of calves and some farm equipment into the family truck, load themselves into the family car and drive the caravan down the road while the cameras cranked.

They obeyed, seeing no harm in the idea. The pictures taken in a journey of less than a mile, the Stoddarts turned around, unloaded their stuff and got $5 for their trouble.

The Stoddarts are looking for those newsreel men. They understand their pictures have been displayed around the country as an example of North Dakota residents running away from drought. And that, according to Mrs. Stoddart, won't do.

"Why," she says, "I wouldn't live any place else. This is our home. It's where our neighbors live. What would we want to move away for?"

The Stoddarts can't remember what company the camera men were from, but they'd like to see those pictures which, apparently, have been held off the Northwest screens. They have prepared an affidavit of the experience.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Stoddart subscribe to the theory that good and bad years run in seven-year cycles. This, says Mrs. Stoddart, is the seventh bad year, which, says she, is no time to be moving.

20 Wounded, France Protests Rebel Gunfire

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

San Sebastian, Spain, Sept. 3.—Shrapnel, rifle nad machine gun bullets dropped on French soil tonight, wounding 20 and endangering thousands as rebel forces, launching their final major offensive against Irun and San Sebastian, advanced their artillery positions a quarter-mile nearer their objectives.

French officials protested and demanded that belligerents correct their fire.

Irun defenders, deserted by their commander, fought desperately under direction of an anarchist committee. Rebel shells and aerial bombs fell in Irun, San Sebastian and Fontarabia. Loyalist ammunition supplies ran dangerously low,

Poultrymen's Strike Is Laid To Tugwell

Pay of Workers Is Cut to $11 a Week by Order, New Yorkers Say, Union Chiefs to Protest to Wallace Against Aid's Action.

By Robert C. Albright.

Undersecretary of Agriculture Rexford Guy Tugwell yesterday was charged by a group of New York City poultry workers with issuing an order that had the direct effect of slashing their wages from $18 to $11 a week.

A strike of workers engaged in unloading live poultry resulted from the order, which was issued in the face of a warning from the Department of Agriculture's legal department that it might cause a walkout. In an effort at settlement, contractors have agreed to pay the old rate until September 15, pending possible adjustment of the controversy.

Signed by Tugwell.

The order was signed by Tugwell, in his capacity of acting Secretary of Agriculture, during the absence of Secretary Wallace. He acted under authority of the poultry amendment to the packers and stock yards act. This gives the Agriculture Department power—not to fix wages—but to regulate charges made by commission merchants and contractors for the handling of poultry. In the New York case, an ordered reduction in the charge for unloading poultry from a freight car inevitably involved a slash in pay.

It was learned that Tugwell acted the same day that Masten G. White, Agriculture Department solicitor, warned him in a memorandum that "a strike will follow" if union workers refused to accept "a reduced scale of pay."

Dennis Lane, international secretary of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North American, came here yesterday to protest.

"The effect of the order is to save money for the farmers at the expense of labor—and labor which even under the old rate was making only a living wage," Lane said.

The Department of Agriculture claimed that the order would result in a saving of $100,000 a year to producers. Lane countered that the saving amounted to only "a quarter of a cent a pound, or about 1 cent per chicken," and added that in any case "it is of no benefit to the public and of little value to the producer, although it causes hardship to labor."

The labor official, who called at the Agriculture Department with John Walsh and Joseph Belsky, vice presidents of his union, said he would make a personal appeal to Secretary Wallace when he returns to the Capital.

Old Charge $52.

The old charge for unloading poultry from a freight car was $52. Five men constitute a gang. Each man received $9 and the contractor received $7. The Tugwell order reduced the rate per car to $34, of which the five-man crew receives $27.50.

Lane said the workers remain on call at the terminal six days a week, but at most are assigned to only two cars to unload.

"Under the old rate our men were getting only $18 a week, and some of them, if assigned to only one car, got only $9," Lane added. "Now this is reduced to $11 a week—$5.50 per man per car—or only $5.50 a week if a man gets only one car to work.

"If we have another strike September 15, and we will unless the $9 rate can be continued, the blame for it must rest on Dr. Tugwell for issuing the order."

Agriculture Department officials argue that there was no attempt to fix wages in the Tugwell order, but merely to fix the "charge" which contractors might make to producers for unloading a car of poultry. But as it works out, much of the slash obviously must come for wages. The contractor's share of the new $34 rate is $6.50, compared with $7 under the $52 rate. The remainder must be taken out of wages.

The Tugwell order was directed

U. S. Golf Stars Swamp British In Walker Play

9-to-0 Defeat Is Worst in 14-Year History of Links Event.

By Paul Mickelson.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

Clementon, N. J., Sept. 3.—Great Britain's hopes of winning the Walker Cup, the huge silver golf trophy that has never left these shores, lay buried among the pines and scrub oaks of Pine Valley tonight.

Answering the challenge of the youngest team ever to represent the British Isles in the international amateur team match series, the American forces laid down such a terrific barrage that they not only beat them but shut them out, 9 to 0, for the first time since the matches opened 14 years ago at Southampton, N. Y. All His Majesty's forces got out of the wreckage were two halved foursomes and a halved singles match, gained by Harry Bentley, 29 year-old Englishman, over George T. Dunlap, jr., of New York, former national amateur champion.

Inasmuch as halved matches go down in the record books as "0-0" contests, the rout went down as an even greater one than the 11-to-1 conquest gained by Bobby Jones and his mates at Chicago in 1928. It was a bitter return for the British, who had eliminated their old Walker Cup stars from the team and nominated younger players in a serious attempt to win.

Reynolds Smith, sharpshooting Texan, led the winning assault for the second day of the matches, fought over the tree-infested Pine Valley Golf Club course. In the foursome yesterday Smith teamed up with a fellow Texan, Ed White, to whip their British foes, 8 and 7, for the most lopsided margin of the round. Today, banging deadly irons stiff to the pins and leading after the fourth hole, he crushed Alec Hill, London stockbroker, 11 and 9, to score the most decisive victory. Smith furnished the first singles point and the habit spread up and down the pine-studded valleys.

Dunlap, victimized by some of the eeriest iron shots of his career, had a close escape. He piled up a 2-up lead on the morning 18, reach-

Silo Gas Kills 2 Women, Child In Maryland as Rescue Fails

Farm Woman, Daughter and Employe Victims of Fumes From Fodder; Fire Rescue Squad's Resuscitation Efforts Are Futile.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Poplar Springs, Md., Sept. 3.—A makeshift silo, selected as a playhouse by 8-year-old Anna Richard, became a chamber of death today for the child, her mother and a hired girl.

The three were killed by gas fumes from ensilage—a cattle feed of corn husks and cobs which had begun fermenting.

Mrs. Emma Richard, 28, the mother, was felled by the fumes when she tried to rescue little Anna and Mary Sian, 20, the hired girl, was overcome when she followed the mother in the heroine's role.

All three were dead when neighbors, using hooks and ropes, hauled their bodies to the ground.

The scene of the tragedy was an old ice house on a farm owned by the Holbrook Dairy, of Hyattsville. This ice house had been converted into a silo, and earlier in the day workmen had poured a load of the cattle fodder, or ensilage, into the circular pit ordinarily used for ice.

Anna Richard and her two playmates—Billy Hood, 5, and Beverly Hood, 3—had seen the workmen from a nearby corn cannery pour the ensilage into the pit. They also had seen the workmen jump into the pit to stamp on the ensilage and press it down.

After the workmen had departed little Anna thought it would be fun to emulate them and jump on the fodder. A chemist, looking down into the pit, might have warned her, for the gas now coming from the mashed fodder was even more deadly than monoxide or coal gas. But there were no chemists on the farm today.

Anna climbed over and started down a ladder leading into the pit. The cattle fodder was about 8 feet down. She was hardly half way when the fumes knocked her senseless and caused her to fall the rest of the way.

Billy Hood was about to follow down the ladder. Seeing Anna fall, he drew back and ran to tell his mother. She in turn told Mrs. Richard.

Mrs. Richard ran to the ice house, started down into the pit, and in a moment was lying unconscious alongside her daughter.

When she first saw her child in the pit, Mrs. Richard screamed, arousing her mother, Mrs. Allie Hulver, back in the farm house.

Bishop Denies Pope Put Curb Upon Coughlin

Back From Vatican Visit, Gallagher Says Priest Was Not Discussed.

By the United Press.

New York, Sept. 3.—Father Charles E. Coughlin speaks "with the voice of God" and the Vatican has made no attempt to curb his political activity, Bishop Michael J. Gallagher, of Detroit—the one man who can tell the Royal Oak priest what to do and when to do it—said today as he returned from Europe on the liner Rex.

It was a busy, happy day for Coughlin. He went down the bay on a cutter to meet the Rex and, in the liner's reception room, knelt and kissed the bishop's ring. He heard his bishop express approval and support of his radio activity. He announced he was going on the air for 26 weekly broadcasts, starting a week from Saturday. He denounced President Roosevelt and Gov. Alf M. Landon, and, when asked which one he preferred, said:

"Don't ask me to choose between carbolic acid and rat poison."

On his trip abroad, Bishop Gallagher visited the Vatican. Yesterday Osservatore Romano, official Vatican newspaper, published a dispatch criticizing Coughlin for calling President Roosevelt a liar in a speech before the Townsend clubs' convention in Cleveland. Bishop Gallagher was asked about that. He replied that he had spoken to Coughlin about that himself and reminded newspapermen that the priest had apologized to the President. Then he commented on the Vatican newspaper's dispatch.

"When the editor of Osservatore Romano said Vatican officials criticized Father Coughlin's action in calling the President a liar, he was clearly enunciating a self-evident truth. The statemen of Osservatore Romano do not reflect the opinion of the Vatican. They are the reflection of the opinion of that paper.

"The question of Father Coughlin was mentioned neither officially nor unofficially in my talks with the holy father. I had called Father Coughlin's attention to the impropriety of calling President Roosevelt a liar before I left for Europe, and he apologized. The matter was never discussed with any Vatican officials unless I brought it up.

"This whole matter is dragged up because it is a Presidential election year. Otherwise, it would not be heard. Anyone could see that the Holy See did not approve of Father Coughlin's calling the President a liar, whether he deserved it or not. There are certain parts of Europe

Landon Joins The President In Des Moines Drought Talk

Pair Indulge in Raillery at Luncheon Table Before Parley.

100,000 Jam City To Cheer Nominees

Roosevelt Called 'Very Fine, Charming Gentleman' by Opponent.

By Franklyn Waltman.

A Staff Correspondent.

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 3.—Under Iowa's gold-domed Capitol, President Roosevelt today met face to face Gov. Alf M. Landon, his Republican opponent, in an atmosphere of good fellowship, not only chatting pleasantly with him but engaging in jests.

On three occasions during the day the two Presidential candidates met, and when they departed tonight—again to assume the roles of political enemies which they shunned today—they were praising each other. Gov. Landon termed the President "a very fine, charming gentleman."

The New Deal verdict, expressed by Rexford Guy Tugwell, brain-truster No. 1, was that "I want to tell you Gov. Landon is one swell fellow." Gov. Clyde L. Herring (Democrat), of Iowa, host of the series of drought conferences held here today, declared that "I am proud of Gov. Landon—he is a credit to the business of being a Governor."

Such exclamations of admiration for political opponents in the middle of this year's hard-fought Presidential contest were no more unusual than the entire incident which monopolized the attention of the citizens of this tall corn State today.

Somewhat Farcial.

Somewhat farcial in tone, due to the extreme efforts made by both President Roosevelt and Gov. Landon to avoid the appearance of playing politics, the meeting nevertheless had a dramatic quality. It was the first time, for instance, that major candidates for the Presidency had met in the middle of a campaign since 1908, when the paths of William Howard Taft and William Jennings Bryan crossed.

None expected President Roosevelt or Gov. Landon to be anything but gracious to each other. But few believed that the three occasions on which they met would be as easy, informal and apparently genuinely warm as they were. Whether this will have any effect on the attitude of the two men during the next two months is problematical. But they hardly could engage in vituperation with each other after their profession of friendship and admiration today.

The President and Gov. Landon sat across the table from each other at luncheon; subsequently conferred over the drought situation in Kansas, the Republican nominee smoking a pipe as he talked with Mr. Roosevelt, and finally, tonight, they sat beside each other at dinner in the President's private car of his special train.

So far as could be learned, no decisions were reached regarding the drought situation. Indeed, the purpose of the conferences the President held during the day with seven drought State Governors was not to formulate a program, but to acquaint Mr. Roosevelt with the situation and proposals for meeting it.

100,000 Throng City.

The fact that the President talked with the Governors of Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Missouri, Wisconsin and Minnesota regarding the drought became incidental to this meeting with Gov. Landon. The 100,000 or more persons who crowded Des Moines streets came to see the two Presidential candidates and cared not a fig for the other Governors. The latter were but supers, supplying the background for this political stage.

President Roosevelt and Gov. Landon first met in the office of Gov. Herring a few minutes before the two candidates sat down together at the same luncheon table.

"How do you do, Mr. President?" said Gov. Landon as Mr. Roosevelt entered on the arm of his son, John.

"How are you, Governor?" responded the President warmly and with one of his best smiles.

The eyes of approximately 50 Federal and State officials were focused on the two contenders in this year's campaign. Everyone stood staring at the President and the Kansan.

"I understand you have been having a long, hard motor trip," asserted the President, breaking an awkward silence.

"Yes, I did," replied Gov. Landon. "But I got here and on time."

The President turned to greet

Richman and Merrill to Go to London Today; Tell of Narrow Escape.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Llandilo, Wales, Sept. 3.—Harry Richman and Dick Merrill tonight decided to spend the night on the little Welsh farm where they were forced down by lack of fuel in their round-trip dash between New York and London.

They plan to take off at 9 a. m. for London where they will await favorable weather for the return trip to New York. Their plane, Lady Peace, rested beside what Richman called "the prettiest little brook you ever saw."

Their flight was made in approximately 18 hours. Richman, night club singer and radio star, bustled around the plane, but Merrill, whose cool nerve and practiced hand brought the Lady Peace to a close shave landing in a cow pasture, rested early tonight. Later he arose to look over the situation.

He found that tomorrow he will have to take off from a pasture 350 yards square and surrounded by a hedge. Later he and Richman went to the small Cawdor Hotel and had supper. There Merrill talked about the forced landing.

"I couldn't see where we were and as the gas analyzer had gone all haywire we had to look for a place to land," he said. "The ship was using 55 gallons of gas where it should have been using only 42. We circled the field at least four times. There were cattle in the field and it was hard to find a place to land. But we were able to land and instead of being in Scotland, as we thought, we found ourselves in Wales."

Richman then revealed that half way across the Atlantic their plane

Bonus Money Gone, War Veteran's Body Is Found in Basin

John Donley liked the Army. Nineteen years ago he enlisted and almost immediately he became a sergeant. He served in France as a machine gunner. When the war was over he liked the Army so well that he continued to serve until 1932. In that year he suffered the loss of an eye and was honorably discharged.

Things weren't so pleasant for him then. A man who made his acquaintance not long ago over on the park benches at the Tidal Basin confided that yesterday. But in 1932 Donley still had something to look forward to—a prospective bonus. So he joined a bonus army movement and he took a keen interest in the progress of legislation that finally brought him his bonus bonds. He cashed them in two months ago. The other day that money was all gone.

Yesterday his body was found in the Tidal Basin and his park bench companion said that Donley had been drinking pretty heavily. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said Donley had been dead for 24 hours and that he either had fallen or had thrown himself into the water.

In his pocketbook was $18, a ticket which showed he had pawned his watch and a picture of himself and a woman.

New Method Keeps Milk Fresh On Trip to Capetown and Back

The odyssey of a boatload of sweet milk which rode the hold of a Dutch freighter from Rotterdam to Capetown and back again and withstood the churning, rolling, tepid tropic seas and still stayed sweet, may help solve drought problems or overcome a temporary breakdown of delivery systems in large cities, Department of Commerce officials predicted yesterday.

Announcement on Wednesday of the discovery of a method to keep milk fresh and sweet for long periods was followed yesterday by details of an experimental voyage for hundreds of gallons of milk to prove the method was sound.

Shortly after the milk preservation formula was developed by a German scientist, it was learned, milk was loaded on a Dutch steamer at Rotterdam. Part of the milk was delivered in Capetown just as fresh as the Capetown products. The rest was taken back to Rotterdam—and it was just as good as the day a Dutch farmer milked it.

Secret of the method is forcing oxygen through milk. Chemists say the apparatus works on the same principle as "soft" drinks are charged with carbondioxide gas.

C. C. Cancannon, of the Department of Commerce, took time to speculate yesterday about the far-reaching effects of the method if it were introduced to America.

Cancannon conceded that if the formula were successful it would not be disastrous to all the babies in California if all the cows in California and two dozen neighboring States died from the drought.

It wouldn't be disastrous because there still would be cows left in Maryland, maybe, and some in New York and other States. A farmer from one of these States, providing he had facilities for preserving milk the new way, could ship it by the slowest train to California.

Belchite, Spain, Sept. 3.—I walked along a dusty road in Aragon today and came to the village of Pina, where, behind the loyalist lines, I saw two crucified priests hanging from their crosses.

One hung in an upright position—just as Christ was crucified. The other hung head downward—the position in which St. Peter was supposed to have been crucified.

I saw other things along the road as I marched 30 miles from Zaragosa south to Belchite with a column of rebel cavalry and infantry under Lieut. Col. Arce. There were bodies that the vultures had found. And in a little village so small that it does not appear on my map 11 persons—aged men,

Jay Allen's copyrighted story in the Chicago Tribune describing the execution of Spanish loyalist refugees driven by the Portuguese back to certain death at the hands of the rebels shocked, but did not surprise those who have studied Portuguese-Spanish alliances in the past ten years.

The Allen dispatches were dated Elvas, Portugal. They revealed that loyalist refugees who fled from blood-drenched Badajoz either were turned back at the border by Portuguese "international police" or actually driven at pistol point from asylum within to certain death by rebel (Fascist) firing squads. One incident described was the execution of 1,800 men, women and children in a bull ring at Badajoz.

There has been a friendly alliance for ten years between the military-dictator government of Portugal's Oliveira Salazar and Spain's Fascist forces. Yet the revelation that Spanish revolutionary headquarters are maintained at Estoril, a smart resort

Landon Jests With Roosevelt In Des Moines

Nominees, at Drought Parley, Indulge in Good-Natured Raillery.

one by one, the other five Governors present. Philip La Follette of Wisconsin did not arrive until later in the day. A few minutes later the President sat down to luncheon of fried chicken and corn on the cob, with Gov. Landon seated almost directly across from him.

The guests were seated at seven luncheon tables in the Iowa Governor's reception room. Occasional laughter came from the table at which the two Presidential candidates and Governors sat.

Indulge in Raillery.

It was reported that when discussing the drought, the President turned to Gov. Landon and said smilingly:

"When you get in the White House, you'll appreciate how troublesome these things can be."

Another report was that Mr. Roosevelt told his Republican opponent:

"If you take my place in the White House, get yourself a small boat and go fishing on the Potomac—it would be pretty hard without that."

"I'll remember that," Gov. Landon replied with a smile.

As the luncheon guests at the President's table seated themselves, Gov. Robert Cochran of Nebraska solemnly announced:

"Gentlemen, we have with us today the President of the United States and the next President."

Everyone laughed. With the exception of Gov. Landon, all those at this table were Democrats.

After the luncheon, which required nearly an hour, the President began his series of drought conferences. Sitting in Gov. Herring's office, he received the Governors one by one, in the order of the admittance of their States into the Union. Thus Gov. Landon was the third to confer with the President, being preceded by Gov. Guy B. Park of Missouri and Gov. Herring.

Each Governor was accompanied by his own drought experts and Federal relief officials in his State. Sitting throughout all the conferences with the President were Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, PWA Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, RA Administrator Rexford G. Tugwell, CCC Administrator Robert Fechner, Gov. William I. Myers, of FCA, and other New Deal chieftains.

Gov. Landon left with the President a report on the drought situation in Kansas, which also contained proposals for dealing with the relief needs of the State and conservation of water. The questions asked by the President were covered by the report, Gov. Landon said subsequently. The Kansan explained that the President remembered a discussion regarding water conservation which they had in 1933 at the White House, and also a program for water conservation proposed by the Kansas Governor in 1934.

Immediately after his conference with the President, Gov. Landon went to his totel, where he remained until he left for the Presidential train tonight to attend Mr. Roosevelt's dinner in honor of the seven Governors.

Conversation Is Casual.

At the dinner there was informal conversation in which all joined in discussing the drought situation, the Spanish Civil War, the war clouds over Europe and the beginning of the football season.

Unlike the luncheon, the official precedence of the Governors in the order in which their States were admitted to the Union was abandoned. Instead, the President placed Gov. Herring at his right and Governor Landon at his left. Governor Marland sat at the other end of the oblong table, with Governors Peterson and Park at his right and left, respectively. Governors Cochran and La Follette sat in the middle on the sides, the latter next to Governor Landon.

The dinner party lasted less than two hours. Wisconsin and Minnesota officials then arrived to confer, with their Governors, with the President. These conferences ended about an hour before the Presidential train lft at midnight for Hannibal. After the bridge dedication the President will go to Springfield, Ill., tomorrow to visit Lincoln's Tomb and confer with Gov. Henry Horner.

At his hotel, Gov. Landon paid tribute to President Roosevelt in reply to questions. He said he had "a nice time, a very pleasant visit," with Mr. Roosevelt.

"Were your suggestions well received?"

"They were," the Kansan replied.

He said he thought the conference was "productive of good" and that he believed it would contribute to a solution of the drought problem.

"What is your personal opinion of the President?" he was asked.

"I think he is a very fine, charming gentleman."

Gov. Landon started back to Topeka by automobile after the dinner. In the event the trip proves tiresome, he said, he will spend the rest of night in some Iowa or Kansas town en route.

Thousands Cheer Roosevelt.

Although State Governors and United States Senators arrived in Des Moines from dawn to noon, the day's activities from the public viewpoint did not begin until the nine-car Presidential special slid slowly into the Rock Island station at exactly 12 noon. Surrounding the station were several thousand persons—a number wearing Landon sunflower buttons.

Lined up at attention were two troops of the Fourteenth Cavalry, their buglers heralding the appearance of the President, who stepped to the rear platform of his private car, Pioneer, leaning on the arm of his son, John.

A loud cheer went up and the President waved a response. Secret Service men waved aside radio men, who implored the President to say a word of greeting to Des Moines. Mr. Roosevelt immediately went to his open automobile and sat beside Gov. Herring and Mayor Joe Allen, of Des Moines.

The Presidential party traversed 2½ miles of the Des Moines business section, more than twice the direct distance from the railroad depot to the Capitol. Crowds numbering in the tens of thousands lined the route of the President's tour, four and five deep.

Meanwhile, word came that Gov. Landon's motorcade was on the outskirts of the city. The Republican Presidential nominee arose at 5 a. m., and by motor left Topeka at 6:20 a. m. to make the 250-mile trip to Des Moines. He was accompanied by four drought experts from Kansas State College—Dr. L. E. Call, dean of agriculture; W. E. Grimes, head of the economics and sociology department; Dr. Harry Umberger, dean of extension service, and George Knapp, water resources engineer.

Gov. Landon stopped at Leon, Iowa, to get shaved and then continued on his way. At Hotel Sylvan, a tourist camp out of Des Moines, he was met by a squad of motorcycle policemen—and the host assigned to him for the day—Cyrus Leland, Des Moines resident and former classmate at the University of Kansas. There also, additional newspapermen met him, increasing his motorcade to 14 cars.

As Gov. Landon, in a sailor straw hat and white suit, stepped from his automobile he was surrounded by several hundred cheering men and women, while several thousand more started running in his direction. Policemen quickly formed a phalanx around him and pushed through the cheering crowd as they ascended the capitol steps.

Covered with dust from his speedy trip through the drought-afflicted parts of Kansas and Iowa, Gov. Landon hurried to a washroom in Gov. Herring's suite. As he emerged, the President, escorted by Gov. Herring, was entering the room. The two men thus came face to face in a most undramatic manner, entirely unlike that planned with great care for a week by the local committee.

Politics and People

Roosevelt's Drought Conference Smacks of Childish Atmosphere; Satire on Absurdities.

By Franklyn Waltman

DES MOINES, Iowa, Sept. 3.—Perhaps never before in recent American political history has so ludicrous an event taken place as that which took place in this Middle Western city today when President Roosevelt and Republican Presidential Nominee Alf M. Landon came here, presumably for a drought conference.

WALTMAN.

Except for the fact that anything can happen in American politics, it is unbelievable that men who regard themselves as statesmen and leaders of the people, directing their social and economic lives, could be so childish as to their actions.

No better satire on the absurdities of American politics could be written than to give a detailed and truthful account of what happened in Des Moines today. It would make the antics of Vice President Throttlebottom, in "Of Thee I Sing," a lugubrious performance.

Here was the President of the United States anxious to ascertain the fullest possible amount of information about a drought which has left distress in its wake over a sizable part of the country. He believed that he could best get this information from the Governors of seven of the afflicted States. For convenience sake the President asked these Governors to meet him in Des Moines, a centrally located point.

So far there is nothing ludicrous or amusing about the story. But it happens that the country will have a Presidential election within two months—and that the President is a candidate for re-election. It also happens that his Republican opponent is one of the Governors invited to participate in the conference.

"Politics," suggested someone, and immediately the whole picture changed. Mr. Roosevelt lets it be known that there is no politics involved in the meeting and he gives instructions that anything which remotely smacks of politics is to be eleminated from the program. He is interested only in relieving the drought situation. He is not even thinking about his re-election.

Gov. Landon asserts that he will attend the conference—as Governor of Kansas, but not as the Republican nominee. He will have nothing to do with politics. The President might arrive in Des Moines aboard an air-conditioned special train, amid a fanfare and trumpery—other Governors may come in Pullman drawing rooms—but he, why as a Governor of a typical Prairie State, he will come by automobile, even if he has to get up at 5 a. m. to do so and get shaved along the way.

Word comes from the President that he does not wish to see any political leaders while in Des Moines and that he would appreciate it if no particular attention were paid to his visit. It is even intimated that it would be wrong to cheer.

The local committee develops a case of jitters and asks local merchants not to display pictures of the two Presidential candidates in their windows. The committee is so anxious to achieve secrecy for the President and his conferees that a huge canvas curtain is stretched down the Capitol rotunda, shielding the Governor's suite—where the conference is to be held—from view.

Mothers fear to bring their babies along, lest the temptation to kiss them might prove too strong for the Presidential candidates traveling incognito. But the chamber of commerce plans to care for 100,000 visitors.

When the President arrived aboard the private car "Pioneer"—no political significance in that—the crowd forgot itself and cheered. Others in the crowds who gazed at the President wore Landon sunflowers. In order to get to the Capitol from the train the President's motorcade first went several blocks west—away from the Capitol—and then turned a corner and paralleled the first route in the opposite direction.

Gov. Landon left his automobile at the foot of the Capitol grounds and, as a man of the prairies, walked through the grounds waving his hat. No one seemed to know what happened to the other Governors until a report came that they had in some way reached Gov. Herring's office.

Beyond the canvas curtain 100 newspapermen scrambled over one another to find out what is happening in the Governor's suite. A quiver goes through the assemblage. That dramatic moment has arrived. "The President is meeting Gov. Landon," a voice whispers.

A hundred telegraph keys flash the news to a waiting world. Radio men stutter in their haste to tell their listeners that the moment for which all had waited this week had now arrived. President Roosevelt had smiled and said, "How are you, Governor?" in response to Gov. Landon's greeting, "How do you do, Mr. President?"

As the President and the Governors sit down to eat fried chicken and corn on the cob, the excited, panting newspapermen hurriedly consume box luncheons, tossing banana peels into the corners of the marbled rotunda of the Capitol, which is beginning to look like a circus lot. Some read the "eighth extra" of the day, just issued by the Des Moines Tribune.

Word comes that President Roosevelt and Gov. Landon were kidding each other at the luncheon table. The President advised the Kansan if he gets to the White House to try fishing. The telegraph keys again frantically flash the momentous news to the world.

What about the drought conference? What has been decided? What will President Roosevelt and Gov. Landon do about it? Nobody seems to know. Nobody seems particularly to care. That ain't news.

U. S. to Retain Billion Balance For Emergency

Morgenthau Will Borrow Rather Than Cut Working Capital.

By the Associated Press.

Administration concern over conditions abroad was emphasized yesterday by announcement from Secretary Morgenthau that the Treasury will keep a cash balance of $1,000,000,000 as "insurance" against "anything unforeseen."

Because of "times and conditions" abroad, Morgenthau said, the Government will borrow $400,000,000 this month rather than cut into the Treasury's big working balance for current expenses.

The announcement, made to newsmen gathered around Morgenthau's desk at a specially summoned press conference, was something of a surprise to financial quarters in view of President Roosevelt's recent statement that the cash balance would be curtailed.

Morgenthau said it cost about $2,000,000 a year in interest to keep such a cash balance, but that it was "a very desirable thing to do" because such a reserve "is the safest insurance we can carry for the American people should anything unforeseen occur."

Interest Undisclosed.

The $400,000,000 of new money will be borrowed, Morgenthau said, at the same time the Treasury refinances a maturing $514,000,000 note issue September 15.

Regarding the maturity, Morgenthau said new obligations would be offered in exchange for the notes. He did not disclose the interest rate or other details of the new issue. Announcement of thse details is expected next Tuesday.

President Roosevelt's forecast of a curtailed cash balance came in his revised budget summary this week, when he estimated that net new borrowing this fiscal year would aggregate $750,000,000.

If this figure holds, the September financing will constitute more than half, cutting demands on the money market for new funds during the remainder of the fiscal year to $350,000,000.

In his budget summary, the President announced the Treasury's working balance would be curtailed by $1,100,000,000 during the year. He suggested that instead of borrowing new money, the Government would use some of its cash on hand to meet the year's expenditures.

Two Billions on Hand.

Morgenthau's announcement yesterday, officials said, was not in conflict with the Chief Executive's plan, because for some time the Treasury balance has been running around $2,000,000,000 from which $1,100,000,000 could be used and still leave almost a billion.

Even a working balance of $1,000,000,000, they pointed out, is far more cash than the Treasury kept on hand before the big financing operations of the New Deal.

Morgenthau explained that already this fiscal year about $800,000,000 has been taken from the working balance. Treasury statements showed it had gone to cover the $338,000,000 deficit so far run up, and to meet more than $400,000,000 of bonus bond redemptions.

This leaves only $300,000,000 more to be used between now and next June 30, under the President's curtailment plan.

Offering Relatively Small.

Exclusive of funds which are specifically allocated, the balance is about $1,300,000,000, and the $400,000,000 of new money is expected to bolster it to some extent.

The offering for new cash in mid-September will be next to the smallest since Morgenthau has assumed office. The smallest was $380,000,000 in December, 1933.

With knowledge of the amount of the September financing, financial leaders turned at once to speculation as to its terms. Some thought the new notes would be offered, possibly bearing a slightly lower interest than the 1.5 per cent paid on the maturing issue. There was no Treasury support for this, however.

Security Views Of New Dealers Scored by Knox

Vice Presidential Nominee Says Banks Are Swollen With U. S. Securities.

By the Associated Press.

Lewiston, Me., Sept. 3.—Col. Frank Knox, campaigning as Republican Vice Presidential nominee, declared tonight that "it is monstrous to talk about security when banks are swollen to the explosion point with Government bonds."

"You do not get security under regimentation," Knox said in an address prepared for delivery before a party rally here. "You lose everywhere.

"It is an evil thing to tax workmen in 1937 for old age pensions 30 years away, when the hard-earned dollars they pay out now may be worth 10 cents or 1 cent or nothing in the future.

"There is no security in a Government that experiments with the livelihood of the people, that practices vivisection on the nation's economic body."

Knox swung into Maine today 11 days in advance of the Maine State elections.

Joker Running Wild.

The Vice Presidential candidate came to Lewiston on the fourth day of his travels through New England aboard a special six-car campaign train, which had previously taken him through Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

He is to speak again tomorrow in Dover-Foxcroft in the afternoon and in Waterville at night.

Knox said New England had faced, besides the depression, "a new deal that taxed her industries and restricted her production and terrorized her finance." Adding that it was "a new deal in which a joker in Washington was running wild."

What kind of Federal Government the Nation is to have Knox declared to be "the real issue" in the campaign.

"One kind proposes to enter into every activity, interfere with every individual. It does not say 'please keep off the grass.' It says, 'We'll grow the grass and if we think best, we will make you eat it. We have put that matter in the hands of Mr. Wallace or Mr. Tugwell or some other political accident.'"

"At one time during the NRA hysteria it was seriously proposed at Washington to have the Government start propaganda to encourage marriages in order to boost the market for furniture and kitchen ware.

Says Maine in Bag.

"In due time such a government undertakes to tell the people what they shall eat, what they shall wear, when they shall marry, how many children they shall have, what they shall think and what their children shall be taught.

"Does this sound like exaggeration? Draw a line across Europe from Spain to Russia. You will find living along it 300,000,000 people goose-stepping to the orders of government in every aspect of their lives. At Washington they have one Government bureau with 13,000 employes whose job it is to plan to move American citizens from one place to another, like cattle. It is an inalienable right of American citizens to live where they choose. The present Administration is the first in American history to tinker with this right."

As for the outlook in Maine, Knox said:

"I read in the papers that Gov. McNutt of Indiana and Mr. Gene Tunney are being imported into Maine to help the (Democratic) cause.

"It will need help. They could not carry this election in Maine even with the help of Joe Louis and Max Schmeling."

The Political Arena

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 3.—James A. Farley, Democratic chairman, today announced that Vice President John N. Garner would speak here September 16 at a dinner sponsored by a group of New York Democratic leaders.

Party leaders said the Vice President was expected to make at least two radio speeches on behalf of President Roosevelt and himself later in the campaign, but arrangements had not yet been completed.

Among the visitors at Democratic headquarters were Charles E. Broughton, national committeeman for Wisconsin; James A. Corcoran, Wisconsin State chairman; Mrs. Louise Given, national committeewoman for Wisconsin; Mrs. Mary L. Kendall, national committeewoman for Mississippi, and Mrs. Thomas Baribeau, national committeewoman for North Dakota.

Leaders from all three States told Farley that President Roosevelt would carry their States without difficulty.

Des Moines, Sept. 3 (AP).—The history-making meeting in mid-campaign of President Roosevelt and Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas today occurred just two months before the electors of the Nation decide which shall be the next President of the United States. (It was not the first time, however. They met in 1933.)

November 3 is the general election date.

New York, Sept. 3 (AP).—Rabbi Stephen A. Wise, Jewish liberal leader, will take an active part in the Presidential campaign in behalf of President Roosevelt, James A. Farley, Democratic national chairman, announced today.

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 3 (AP).—Ohio leaders of the Union Party filed petitions with the secretary of state today seeking to qualify Representative William Lemke, of North Dakota, and Thomas C. O'Brien, of Boston, as independent candidates for President and Vice President, respectively, on Ohio's November ballot.

Casper, Wyo., Sept. 3 (AP).—George E. Geier, president of the State Farmers Union, was nominated for the United States Senate at the State convention of the Union Party here today. Clarence Eklund, Buffalo, was nominated for Representative.

Later, the advisory board of the State Townsend pension organization revealed it had indorsed Senator Robert D. Carey for re-election and Frank A. Barrett for Representative. Both are Republicans.

Ogden, Utah, Sept. 3 (AP).—Max Baer announced plans today to mix campaigning for President Roosevelt with his "comeback tour."

The former heavyweight boxing champion said:

"I have joined my pal, Jack Dempsey, in boosting Roosevelt for President. I will make talks on my comeback tour in Wyoming, South Dakota, Iowa and Kansas."

* * * *

In his broadcast last night under auspices of the Republican National Committee, William Hard said "the President could have learned many things in Iowa about how his planners helped to make the drought scarcity worse."

"The AAA this year," said Hard, "offered cash benefits to farmers if they would plant oats, for instance, in the midst of clover and then clip the oats green and let them rot into the soil for soil-conserving purposes.

"These instructions continued in force long after it had become apparent to observers in Iowa that drought conditions would prevail in the Dakotas and that there would be a great need of oats for the feeding of cattle in the whole Northwestern drought region."

In another statement former Comptroller General McCarl referred to President Roosevelt's budget statement and said "his so-called revision of the 1937 budget is probably as favorable to his Administration as any statement could be in the circumstances."

"The figures for the most part are no more than estimates, however," McCarl said, "and as such give no more assurances except a purpose to continue extending relief in about the most wasteful manner possible, and consequently such prompt exhaustion of relief appropriations intended to serve through June, as to necessitate demands upon the new Congress for an additional $500,000,000."

McCarl said Mr. Roosevelt's proposal "to use the Treasury working balance to reduce borrowing, if actually followed out, will be helpful. * * * The continued growth of the public debt, which now seems to be regarded as the regular order, is all but reassuring."

In a statement made public by the Republican Congressional Committee, Representative Bacon, of New York, Eastern Congressional campaign manager, predicted the election of a complete Republican Congressional ticket September 14 in Maine.

"Maine is overwhelmingly determined to vote Republican," said Bacon. "The State is sick and tired of Roosevelt and his wasteful New Deal."

Couple Is Abducted In Own Car, Forced On All-Night Ride

By the Associated Press.

Cumberland, Md., Sept. 3.—Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Coleman, aged Mount Perry (Ohio) couple, were left stranded here today by two men who seized their automobile at Zanesville and forced them to occupy the rear seat during a wild all-night drive across the country.

Their captors, said to be about 20 years of age, fled on reaching Cumberland, leaving Coleman, 68, and his wife, 67, sitting penniless in the automobile.

The Colemans said they offered the men a ride while they were returning to their mount Perry home last night from a shopping trip at Zanesville. They men quietly forced them into the rear seat, took $4.50 from Coleman, bought gasoline and began the harrowing drive.

The couple said that although their captors displayed no weapons and made no threats, they were in such constant dread that they failed to give an alarm when the men stopped at filling stations for gasoline.

CUSTOMIZED CLOTHES

SOME say it was Angus McNab, the famous Scotch fitter in a tailoring establishment in Edinburgh, who made several parallel chalk marks the full length of a patron's jacket while fitting it. "Hoot, Mon!" Angus exclaimed, "Twould make a bra pattern." An unhurried discussion with a noted weaver resulted in the birth of a new pattern for gentlemen's suits. McNab, if that was his name, is dead these many years but today his creation called chalk stripes has been successfully revived and is truly a leading fashion.

Loyalists Reported Killing Workman; Incident Inflames Rome.

found on the body of an aviator killed in a battle revealed foreign aviators in the employ of the rebels were bombarding defenseless towns.

Assailing foreign support of the rebels, the government declared it was "probing fully the extent to which outside nations are involved in Spain's fratricidal war."

The government said a report would be published shortly containing a large quantity of evidence involving foreigners and "proper representations will be made when the dossier is complete."

President Manuel Azana presided at a cabinet session in which international complications of the Spanish civil war were discussed at length.

Earlier the ministry of war announced Socialist government troops marched into the rebel stronghold of Huesca and occupied it tonight.

The town, 36 miles northeast of Zaragoza, had been in the hands of the rebels since early days of the Spanish civil war.

Authorities in announcing the victory said an entire company of rebels joined the government forces before the town was occupied.

Paris, Sept. 3 (AP)—Pressure from two sources was applied to the French government today to force it from its neutrality stand toward Spain.

Failure of Germany to reply to a proposal for formation of a committee to control nonintervention measures, informed sources said, heightened the influence of Communists demanding French aid for the Spanish government.

Without Germany, sources close to the foreign office said, a meeting of the powers' co-ordinating committee would be "useless."

Communists charged the delay was a Nazi maneuver to prevent the full effect of nonintervention by obstructing an accord while the Reich armed Spanish rebels and France "blockaded" the government.

Rightists countered with demands that the government halt "dangerous campaigns" of Communists to prove its sincerity in proposing the neutrality program.

The government, meanwhile, kept its hands off the controversy and stood by its policy to insulate Europe against a spread of the Spanish war.

Neutrality hopes were jolted further when the Spanish Embassy informed governments pledged to neutrality it had received word 24 Italian airplanes were delivered at Vigo, Spain, which is in rebel hands.

Officials said the notification was sent to all governments which have accepted the French nonintervention plan, including Italy.

While a fresh outbreak of the recurring occupation strikes continued to spread, Maurice Thorez, secretary general of the Communist party in France, demanded a workers' uprising against Premier Leon Blum's nonintervention stand.

While informed observers agreed protraction of the Spanish civil war increased the menace to European peace, the government completed a three-point plan to strengthen the national defenses.

The program, drawn up by Edouard Daladier, minister of defense, was reported to provide for:

1. Broad expansion of the French air force.
2. Increases in mortorized war equipment.
3. Enlargement of the army by a recruiting campaign rather than further extension of the period of military service.

It will be presented to the cabinet for discussion Saturday.

Close followers of the Spanish situation feared the losing side could expect no mercy from the victor and, in desperation, might deliberately incite foreign intervention by an attack, for instance, on neutral shipping.

Direct intervention by a nation or bloc of nations, observers said, is feared most because the struggle between fascism and socialism is of paramount interest to France.

Beside the issue over the reported delivery of Italian airplanes to Spanish rebels, well-informed sources said the growing tension between Rome and Madrid over the death of Italian citizens at Barcelona might knock another prop from under the French stand.

Britain Expects Acceptance.

London, Sept. 3 (AP).—Great Britain, informed sources disclosed tonight, expects Germany to accept an invitation to participate in the Anglo-French international neutrality committee.

Hesitation of Germany in responding delayed convocation of the committee which proposes to co-ordinate the "hands off" policies of European powers in the Spanish civil war. The meeting was expected, however, to be called for early next week.

Three more nations accepted offers to join the 12 which already had agreed to send representatives. The new members were Hungary, Soviet Russia and Finland.

Britain, meanwhile, took stock of its own efforts for nonintervention in Spain.

An inter-departmental committee met with William Shepherd Morrison, financial secretary of the treasury, to consider the efficacy of measures already enforced to ban arms and aircraft exports to Spain. The committee also prepared to prevent enlistments in the armies of either belligerent and to bar financial aid should the international committee proscribe such help.

but the defenders, swearing never to surrender, fought to the death.

Rebel artillery set fire to a match factory on the outskirts of Irun. As the big guns moved up, armored cars kept abreast of the attacking infantry.

Most Intensive Attack.

Gloom in loyalist ranks deepened late in the day when the rebels, after consolidating their positions at Behobia and Fort San Marcial, resumed their attack on Irun.

At 4 p. m. the insurgents unleashed an artillery barrage against Irun. Infantry assault forces massed behind a formidable line of armored cars.

Panic ruled in San Sebastian. Many who fled panic stricken from the city last night refused to return.

The rebel offensive was the most intensive thus far.

Rebel planes at 2 p. m. bombed Fontarabia. One bomb struck the wing of an emergency hospital to which the royalists had taken 300 soldiers wounded in the San Marcial battle. One government plane sought to battle two rebel fliers who maneuvered dangerously over the French beach resort at Hendaye. French army planes took to the air and patroled the frontier. The French pilots had orders to drive all Spanish planes out of France.

When the rebel offensive began Irun was wholly encircled on the land side. Loyalists faced a last ditch battle with prospects they would fire their last cartridge within a few hours unless they were able to smuggle munitions across the French frontier.

Gen. Emilio Mola, northern rebel commander, rushed a fleet of armored cars to Behobia from Pamplona. He was anxious to finish the Irun battle as speedily as possible in order to release large numbers of troops engaged here for the assault on Madrid.

Thursday began with bloody fighting when rebels resumed their relentless attack on Behobia. Loyalists, firmly entrenched, continued to hold half the village as well as international bridges at both Irun and Behobia. This gave them a back door for wholesale escape to France, thus avoiding slaughter in event retreat proved inevitable.

Concentrating their entire strength on the Behobia fighting, the rebels withdrew most of their troops from Fort San Marcial and left only a few gunners there. The withdrawn troops were massed with rifles and machine guns for the advance on Behobia and Irun.

Alcazar Defenders Fire.

Toledo, Spain, Sept. 3 (AP).—The long-besieged 1,700 inmates of the Fortress Alcazar tonight raked government barricades in the streets outside, killing and wounding scores of militiamen.

Government batteries renewed their almost incessant bombardment of the historic building as tunnelers speeded efforts to undermine the entire structure with dynamite and blow it up unless the occupants surrender.

Under the government cannonading the entire north wall was demolished and the government cannon turned their range onto the inner wall of the south side, where the besieged persons are believed to be living.

Denial of Refuge to Loyalists Reveals Portugal Aids Rebels

a half hour's drive from Lisbon, the Portuguese capital, may well stagger those who naively believe neutrality pledges and pacts will stave off Armageddon.

The bond between the Fascist elements in the two countries that form the Iberian Peninsula dates from the iron-heeled dictatorship of Span's Primo de Rivera, when a secret accord was reached by both governments relating to exchange of political prisoners and to plans for closely guarded internment.

Since the advent of the republic in Spain in 1931, Portugal has played host to countless counter-revolutionary cabals. Monarchists, military conspirators, militant clerics by the hundreds poured in a steady stream across the border, to be welcomed by the Salazar government in Lisbon and wined by the fashionable in Estoril. That this attitude was appreciated by the deposed Bourbon dynasty was shown in a statement made a few years later by the banished King Alfonso, and reported by the New York Times.

"There is another Fascist regime," Alfonso commented in his royal suite in a Roman hotel, "dictatorial and soft at the same time, to which the world pays very little attention and does not do the justice it deserves—Portugal's. Apparently obscure, but really modest and self-effacing, Oliveira Salazar is, in my opinion, an admirable figure. He does everything without making a show of himself."

Truer words never were spoken by a Bourbon! Salazar "does everything without making a show of himself." And to bolster up his own house of cards he denies all unpleasant facts and censors the news. Jay Allen's story had to be cabled from Morocco; the first dispatch giving the same facts was "caught in the dictator's pneumatic tubes."

Who is this Salazar? Formerly professor of economics at the University of Coimbra, Salazar, now a comparatively young man of 47, became prime minister and minister of finance in 1932 under the so-called Estado Novo (the new regime) of President Carmona. The latter had been re-elected to the chief executive post in 1932 but was little more than a figurehead. The real power was in the hands of the prime minister, who had behind him the reactionary army.

Another "incident" comparable to the recent border episode occurred during the memorable and bloody rising of October, 1934, when scores of Austrian miners, fleeing from summary death sentence, sought sanctuary from their human bloodhounds across the Portuguese border.

And, then as now, in violation of the right of political asylum and against all principles of humanity, they were rounded up by the Portuguese police and delivered into the hands of the executioners.

To return to recent events. At the outset of the present revolt, Gen. Sanjurjo, who was slated for the dictator role in the event of a successful Fascist coup, was killed when his plane crashed on a flight from Lisbon to Madrid. That Sanjurjo was in communication with the rebel leaders, Franco and Mola, there is little question; that he planned the revolt in a neighboring country, with the blessing of the Lisbon regime, is an international scandal that deserves unqualified condemnation.

Other "incidents" are coming to light, too. Unconfirmed reports tell of thousands of Spanish Fascist troops armed and trained on Portuguese soil; of ships loaded in Germany with arms and ammunition, headed for "neutral" Lisbon (one was impounded at Antwerp, Belgium, by militant dock workers), and of a propaganda office recently opened under the aegis of Salazar that has become a center for the diffusion of lies about "burning churches," "Red cruelty" and "smashing victories" of Franco.

Out of the welter of charges and counter-charges that burn up the cables a few facts about Salazar's expressed sympathies are worth mentioning.

Silent before the unprecedented cruelties of the Franco forces when they mowed down with machine guns some 1,800 unarmed men and woman in the bull-ring at Badajoz, he nevertheless found sufficient voice to protest to London against the "mass killings" perpetrated by half-starved Spanish peasants.

That Portugal at last has agreed to "localize" the Spanish civil strife can only be viewed by observers with suspicion. For the Portuguese frontier functions as the "life line" for the Fascist armies, its base of supplies, its mecca of safety.

The day when the frontier is lost to the rebels they will be thrown back to the none-too-tender mercies of the peasants of Andalusia. And that explains the desperate rebel attempt to wrest Irun from the loyalists; for that city is unimportant from Madrid's point of view in their military scheme of things.

To the Fascists, however, Irun means not only a route to the sea, thus a base of supply, but a much-needed "red herring" to divert attention from the fact that they are getting, and will continue to get, munitions from a supposedly neutral country.

Red Atrocities In Spanish War Are Described

women and a few children—lay dead against the wall of a church in which they had sought sanctuary. They had been shot in the back.

The officers in this rebel column told me that the peasants by the church wall were hostages slaughtered only a few hours before as the loyalists withdrew before our advance.

Arce, white-faced with anger, ordered dismounted cavalry divisions, supported by volunteer foot troops, to occupy as many villages as possible before execution squads do their tasks.

"The red savages are doing their best to intimidate us, but they only arouse my men to higher anger," Arce told me. "They are very cowardly and only find courage when advancing in large numbers against forces inferior in numbers.

Treachery Is Recounted.

"Among their dead we have found convicts from Barcelona prisons and the worst elements from Barcelona slums, pickpockets and white slavers. These people prey upon the countryside, pillaging, raping and killing any one with property. They are not content merely to kill, but work up a thirst for torture.

"Typical of the treacherous methods they use was the killing of the popular insurgent commander Velez on the Teruel front a few days ago. A small band of Reds carrying a white flag advanced from the enemy lines. One called to Velez, saying he had formerly served under him and wanted to surrender. Velez went out to him with arms outstretched to give him an embrace, but at that moment the soldier pulled a pistol and shot Velez dead."

Atlantic Fliers, Forced Down, Rest in Wales

nose-dived and threw him and Merrill out of their seats.

"It seemed ages before we regained control but we really only struggled for a couple of minutes," he said. "In that time we lost 3,000 feet."

Merrill, veteran air-line pilot, lay down to rest and let Richman do the talking. A plane from Croydon was on the way with 50 gallons of fuel.

"We flew at about 11,000 feet most of the trip," Richman said. "Most of the time we didn't see the Atlantic for more than an hour at a time. The machine ran beautifully, sometimes reaching 250 miles an hour.

"We were terribly sorry we landed here in a field full of cows and sheep. It's a little awkward, but we didn't hurt anything."

The fact that lack of fuel forced them down in the flat pasture country of this part of Wales was ironic for Richman and Merrill had made elaborate preparations for a forced landing on water. They had packed the wings of the plane with thousands of table tennis balls to give buoyancy to the plane and help keep it afloat.

Nation Stands At Crossroads, Watson Warns

Greatest Test Since Civil War Confronting U. S., Says Ex-Senator.

By the Associated Press.

Indianapolis, Sept. 3.—Convinced "the hour is solemn," former Senator James E. Watson, of Indiana, says in his new book, "As I Knew Them," published today by Bobbs-Merrill, that "for the second time since the founding of our Government, the strength and coherence of that Government are being tested."

Backing his observations with 39 years of experience in the national House and Senate, he explains that "in 1861 it was tried by war. Today far more subtle, but no less potent, agencies are at work to undermine the very foundations of its structure. We stand at the crossroads. We must make the choice: Shall we cling to the principles upon which the United States was built into the foremost nation on earth, or shall we depart from these principles and start all over again?"

Watson ends his 313-page work—which is full of anecdotes, personalities and political philosophy—with the declaration that the future of the country will be assured "if the Constitution of the United States is preserved and perpetuated and if the courts set up under its provisions are continued with their powers inviolate and with their rights fully respected."

Decries Personal Hatreds.

The veteran Republican politician, elected first to Congress in November, 1894, leads off his observations with those who still waved the "bloody shirt" of the Civil War, and continues to the present Administration.

He says that "the entire trend of events, in national as well as international life, has often been altered by the personal hatreds of individuals and the flaming ambitions of men."

Watson, who claims responsibility for the late Huey Long's 20-day filibuster, says his first expeirence in that phase of practical politics started back in DePauw University, where he once had a young student preacher pray for an hour and a quarter until opposing factions could be aligned.

Observations Quoted.

Among his pointed observations are: "We never had a successful President who was not a successful politician * * * while I was in the House and Senate I never knew one single individual who would sell himself for cash * * * I have never known an 'investigation' to amount to much of anything either in a practical or political way * * *.

"People want men who have the reputation for thinking rather than talking * * * Length of service gives experience, and without experience a man merely counts on the roll-call. * * * Not one of the great pyrotechnic orators of the country has been elected President."

Watson classes as the "two wisest men in the realm of politics I have ever known, Boise, Penrose and 'Uncle Joe' Cannon."

Navy Investigates Death of Officer

Vallejo, Calif., Sept. 3 (AP).—A board of inquiry convened today at the Mare Island Navy Yard to investigate perplexing angles of the death yesterday of Lieut. Wiley N. Hand, 37, aviation officer of the U. S. S. Maryland.

The naval flier, who disappeared from Long Beach on August 26, was stricken on a ferry boat en route from San Francisco to Mare Island preparatory to return to Long Beach to face an inquiry growing out of his disappearance.

Capt. William M. McDonnell, in charge of the navy yard hospital where Hand died, ordered an autopsy ot determine whether the officers had taken poison.

Hand was located in San Francisco after his abandoned automobile was found at Bakers Field. He was accompanied on the ferry boat by Lieut. Comdr. Frank Satre. He suddenly slumped to the deck. The crew gave him first aid. Satre said he understood Mrs. Margaret Hand believed her husband was despondent because of his reported failure to pass recent promotional examination.

Mrs. W. F. Hitt, Society Figure In Capital, Dies

Once Rumored Betrothed to Royalty; Married to Husband Twice.

Mrs. William F. Hitt, 50, Washington and Middleburg, Va., society woman whose reported engagement to the Duke d'Abruzzi, cousin of the King of Italy, made front-page news in 1907, died yesterday in Roosevelt Hospital, New York City. She had been ill ten days

Mrs. Hitt was the former Katherine Elkins, daughter of the late Stephen B. Elkins, Senator from West Virginia. Her romance with the Italian was followed in 1913 by a surprise marriage to William Hitt, son of Representative Robert Hitt, of Illinois.

The couple was divorced in Paris in 1921. Less than two years later, in March, 1923, the two were remarried in Washington.

In recent years they had divided their time between their estate near Middleburg and their Washington home at 1501 New Hampshire avenue northwest. Mrs. Hitt took great interest in the training and breeding of horses and was well known as a horsewoman. She was at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., when taken ill.

The romance with the Duke d'Abruzzi began when he came to this country in command of an Italian warship. The duke was then 34, Miss Elkins, 21.

A courtship followed which attracted the interest of the entire country. There were rumors of an interchange of rings and a report of their engagement went undenied for months. The Italian royal family disapproved of the engagement, but rumors persisted until Miss Elkins' marriage with "Billy" Hit at Elkins, W. Va., in 1913. Guests at the Hitt home did not know of the wedding until 20 minutes before the ceremony.

The Paris divorce in 1921 once more set social circles buzzing. After the decree had been granted, the couple returned to the United States on the same boat, apparently on the best of terms.

In March, 1923, they were remarried—in a civil ceremony here that was as much of a surprise affair as the first nuptials.

Surviving Mrs. Hitt are her husband, a brother, Davis Elkins, former Senator from West Virginia, who now makes his home in Washington, and a nephew, Stephen B. Elkins.

Funeral services will be held at her home here at 3:30 p. m. Saturday. Burial will be in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Col. T. W. Hammond Dies.

New York, Sept. 3 (AP).—Col. Thomas W. Hammond, who commanded a combat unit in the World War, died last night of heart trouble at his home here. Col. Hammond was commissioner of the municipal department of water supply, gas and electricity. He is survived by his wife and a son, Lieut. Chester Hammond.

Mystery Dust in 'Milky Way' Reported at Harvard Meeting

Astronomers Visiting Tercentenary Hear Substance Floats Between Stars; 'Nuisance of Reverence for Classics in Music' Cited.

By the Associated Press.

Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 3.—A mysterious new dust, unlike anything known on earth, discovered floating between the stars in the Milky Way, was reported at the Harvard tercentenary today.

The unknown dust is one of a series of new wonders of the sky announced at a session of the American Astronomical Society which shared with a study of music this fourth day of Harvard's celebration of its founding.

"Reverence for the classics," in music, was held to be a "nuisance," and music was declared the starting point of the recently attained national independence of several European nations.

In astronomy the stars were weighed; some of the stuff in their depths discovered. "Death rays" of ultraviolet far more excessive than heretofore suspected were declared to exist just above stratosphere flight height records.

Dust particles were measured in the far-off Milky Way and found to be just big enough to be seen under a microscope if brought to earth.

The discovery of red stars was reported, amazingly cooler than any star previously known, their surface heats ranging between 1,800 and 1,300 degrees Fahrenheit.

The mystery dust was reported by Paul W. Merrill and O. O. Wilson, of Mount Wilson Observatory. It is part of the dust in the Milky Way which is visible to the naked eye as the dark patches.

The regions where it floats lie between stars and are supposed to be intensely cold.

Dr. Merrill, examining these patches with the spectroscope, found that some of the particles absorbs light in a way wholly new to scientists.

"I am completely unable to give any explanation of the cause," he told the astronomers today.

Astronomers are reluctant, it was announced by the society, to believe that this dust is some chemical element unknown on earth. Rather they think the dust is some familiar stuff, but in a peculiar physical state unknown and probably not existing on earth.

Music was discussed by Dr. Edward Joseph Dent, of Cambridge University.

"To us of the present day," he said, "music has become almost a religion, or a substitute for religion."

"A modern doctrine," he continued, "which in these days is becoming something of a nuisance is 'reverence for the classics.'"

"To persons of taste all this musical antiquarianism is dangerous and unsettling. It is not surprising that some of the younger generation, as well as one or two of the older, are inclined to throw the classics and all old music overboard and maintain that no music is worth listening to except that which is not from the composer's brain.

"There, at any rate, is a thoroughly logical and reasonable doctrine."

The idea, he said, that modern symphonies are not so good as Beethoven's "is a cheap fallacy."

Concerning music's effect on nations, he said "consider what has happened in Europe during recent years; a number of new states have been formed, and a number of small nations have obtained new independence. In almost every case the movement toward independence has been initiated by men of learning who collected and wrote down the songs and legends of the peasant classes."

James A. Reed Says Roosevelt Is No Democrat

Ex-Senator, Jeffersonians' Head, Scores 'Defying of Constitution.'

By the Associated Press.

Portland, Me., Sept. 3.—Former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, declared in an address here tonight that "no one has the right to say President Roosevelt is a Democrat."

Reed is chairman of the National Jeffersonian Democrats, an organization opposed to re-election of Mr. Roosevelt. Reed's speech opened the group's campaign in this State.

The Missourian stressed what he termed a "bold effort to evade and defy the Constitution" by the present Administration, after asserting there were three parties in the Nation, the third of which he named as the "Roosevelitian party, neither Republican nor Democratic, but embracing every shade from pink socialism to red communism."

"The principles of the Constitution of the United States are as true as they were when Jefferson, Madison, Pinckney and Washington and others proclaimed them, and the people adopted them * * *," Reed asserted. "But today we are confronted with a bold effort to evade and defy the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, and to overthrow the very foundations of American civilization.

"That is destruction and from destruction there can be no recovery."

Reed then turned back a dozen years.

"In 1924 a radical element appeared as the Progressives," he said, "with Robert M. La Follette as its candidate for President. The platform of the party was almost entirely socialistic.

Did Not Give Up.

"La Follette did not get very far, but his adherents did not give up. In 1932 a conference of these so-called progressives was called—and four of the delegates to that convention now sit in the Cabinet of the President. They are Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of Commerce; Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior; Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, and Henry Morgenthau, jr., Secretary of the Treasury."

Others named by Reed as then affiliated with the movement included Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator; Rexford Tugwell, resettlement administrator; Basil Manly, member of the Federal Power Commission; Jay Franklin, and Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor.

"Measured by these appointments and by the nondescript advisers he has called to his counsels, no one has the right to say Roosevelt is a Democrat," the former Senator declared.

Of the Republican Presidential nominee from Reed's neighbor State, Kansas, he said:

"I hold no brief for Gov. Landon; he is a Republican and I am a Democrat. But this much I say: He has never undertaken to repudiate the Constitution, to sneer at its precepts, or to contemptuously refer to its authors. He has not assailed the Supreme Court. * * * He has not proposed the confiscation of property through taxation, or by any other method."

Throngs to See Air Races Open On Coast Today

Annual Carnival Expected to Be Most Significant Ever Staged.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Sept. 3.—Before the gaze of thousands, the Nation's fastest air craft will roar over Los Angeles at speeds of 5 miles a minute tomorrow to open aviation's annual carnival of speed and endurance—the $70,000 national air races.

In many cases flying innovations will get their first public showing in the four-day air program here. Past experience has demonstrated that engine design developments which stand the grilling tests of the national races soon find their way into commercial aviation.

Vincent Bendix, donor of one of the principal prizes, believes this year's races "will be the most significant ever held," he said today.

"Developments of carburation and motor design in the past six months," he said, "have made possible speeds heretofore believed impossible."

Starting before dawn at New York, a spectacular airplane race from ocean to ocean, with $15,000 in prizes and the Bendix Trophy at stake, will end before the airport grandstands late in the afternoon.

Air race headquarters said the field had been reduced to six: Amelia Earhart; Laura Ingalls, of Long Island; Louise Thaden, Bentonville, Ark.; Ben O. Howard, Chicago; Joe Jacobson, Kansas City, and George Pomery, of Washington.

Mrs. Marty Bowman, Burbank, Calif., said late today she had decided not to compete.

Spreckels Wins Trophy.

San Diego, Calif., Sept. 3 (AP).—Frank Spreckels, of San Francisco, tonight was declared winner of the grand prize of the Ruth Chatterton cross-country air derby, which ended here today.

Derby officials credited the wealthy young sportsman pilot with 1,184.8 points of a possible 1,200 for the six-day 2,460-mile jaunt from Cleveland, Ohio.

Spreckels was awarded the Chatterton Trophy at a dinner in honor of the 34 fliers at the San Diego Fair tonight.

"Boy! There's a real Tom Collins!"

"SAY, FELLOW, that's the finest edition of a Tom Collins I ever tasted! How do you make it?"

"I'll tell you the secret, Jim—just the way an old-time bartender told it to me. A Tom Collins needs a smooth-mixing gin which will bring out the flavor of the fruit juice—never overpower it.

"You get that quality in Fleischmann's Gin. It's distilled from American grain by an American formula . . . and Americans have always had a special hankering for smooth drinks."

"Thanks for the tip, old man. If Fleischmann's can do things like this for a Tom Collins, I'm certainly going to use it myself from now on!"

Police Scatter Riotous Crowd At Baker Plant

Colored Woman Decked as Bride Walks Line With Elderly Pickets.

Police called to the Dutch Baker Boy plant at 807 Monroe street northwest to answer a riot call yesterday afternoon found a milling throng of about 50 union and non-union men, two aged union pickets and a middle-aged colored woman wearing a muslin bridal veil. Placards dangling from her shoulders bore the inscription "Just Married."

The crowd, which for a time threatened trouble, was quickly dispelled by police but spectators lingered to watch the woman, Martha Jackson, "embarras" the pickets.

According to Martin Lunsford, sales manager at the plant, the non-union men now working there hired her for that purpose. Amiably munching a large bun, she carried out her duties with apparent pleasure.

Her method was to walk by the side of one of the bewhiskered picketers as he patrolled his beat. Occasionally she and her partner would encounter the second picket and neither side would give way. The non-union drivers who lined the parapet of the bridge across from the plant would cheer them.

The fun stopped at 6 p. m. when the pickets doffed their placards. One of them, in a thick Irish brogue, advised her to "go home to her husband." The other mumbled that he's "never had so much fun."

Arsenal Is Seized, Anarchist Jailed

Bay Shore, N. Y., Sept. 3 (AP).—State police today seized a 67-year-old hermit "with a grudge against everybody" and his arsenal of home-made bombs and firearms, with which, they said, he threatened violence to prominent persons. A justice of the peace immediately locked him up for 30 days.

The arresting officers said their prisoner, who described himself as Joseph Kuehnel, an anarchist, made rambling statements in which he named prominent persons, and asserted "the country is not being run right." He mentioned President Roosevelt's name, but did not make any direct threats against him, the State police said.

He was found in an isolated shack on Artists Lake, Long Island. Around him was a honeycomb of dynamite, home-made cartridges and guns; and a queer-looking contrivance, fitted to be strapped to a human's back, with nine sticks of dynamite.

Spanish War Unit Elects New Chief

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Sept. 3 (AP).—United Spanish War Veterans elected Scott Leavitt, of Milwaukee, Wis., commander in chief today and closed their thirty-eighth annual encampment.

Leavitt was installed immediately. He succeeds Robert S. Cain, of Pittsburgh.

Senator Alfred L. Kennedy, of New York, was named senior vice commander, and Thomas W. Payne, Detroit, junior vice commander. Neither had opposition.

The delegates voted to meet August 21 to 26, 1937, in Columbus Ohio.

Leavitt appointed J. J. McDevitt, of Milwaukee, adjutant general, and Harry R. Stevens, Great Falls, Mont., assistant adjutant general.

Census Bureau Blames Heat For 17.5% Rise in City Deaths

29,338 Toll Between May 30 and August 29 in 15 Cities; Represents Increase of 4,376 Over Same Period Last Year, Figures Indicate.

By the Associated Press.

The same scorching heat which burned out farm crops this year was held by the Census Bureau yesterday to be a major factor in a 17.5 per cent jump in the death rate of cities in the Midwest and North Central States.

A compilation of 15 cities showed deaths between May 30 and August 29 totaled 29,338, compared with 24,962 for the same period last year. This was an increase of 4,376 in these cities alone.

Although figures for heat deaths are not kept separately, officials said much of the rise resulted from "direct, or indirect" effects of soaring temperatures.

A special study for the week ended July 18 previously had shown that extreme heat pushed mortality figures 65 per cent above the corresponding 1935 week and 19 per cent above the week which recorded the most severe temperatures of the 1934 heat wave.

In its check of selected cities, the Bureau reported the greatest percentage increase of 1935 for Minneapolis, which had 1,590 deaths this summer compared with 1,183 last year, an advance of 34.4 per cent.

Figures for other cities, showing total deaths for this summer, last summer and percentage of increase, follow:

Chicago, 8,926-8,024—11.2; Cincinnati 1,787-1,600—11.7; Cleveland, 2,574-2,296—12.1; Des Moines, 428-374—14.4; Detroit, 3,650-2,996—21.8; Duluth, 331-275—20.4; Indianapolis, 1,453-1,214—19.7; Kansas City, Kans., 452-423—6.4; Kansas City, Mo., 1,399-1,161—20.5; Milwaukee, 1,366-1,139—19.9; Oklahoma City, 602-534—12.7; Omaha, 771-723—6.6; St. Louis, 3,138-2,357—33.1; St. Paul, 871-661—31.8.

New Violence Widens Breach In Labor Ranks

A. F. of L. and C. I. O. Issue Statements Indicating Final Split Is Near.

By the United Press.

Warring factions of organized labor drew further apart last night as new violence was reported in the insurgent group's fight to organize the steel industry.

Both William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and John L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization, issued statements making it evident that tomorrow's technical deadline in their feud over methods of organizing workers would produce a final split in the federation.

Labor's common cause against steel employers, however, had no influence in drawing together the opposing factions. On August 5, the A. F. of L. executive council suspended the C. I. O. unions, which insist that any industry's workers be organized into one big union instead of by crafts. It gave the C. I. O. 30 days to disband or face permanent expulsion.

Green reiterated the A. F. of L.'s stand by acknowledging acceptance of the resignation of David Dubinsky, C. I. O. member of the executive committee, with a rebuke.

Lewis, landing in New York after a European vacation, said there was "some question whether the C. I. O. will waste trainfare" sending delegates to the A. F. of L. convention at Tampa, Fla., November 16.

Green told Dubinsky, head of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, he doubted that "a large percentage" of the union agreed with the choice made by their leaders.

"I am confident," he added, "that a very large and substantial number of the members of your international union value very highly affiliation with the American Federation of Labor. They, I am sure, cannot regard lightly or with favor a decision which means the severance of a profitable relationship with the A. F. of L. covering a period of many years."

38 Women in U. S. Seek Posts Abroad in Diplomatic Corps

By the Associated Press.

Seeking appointments in the foreign service, from which Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen Rohde has just resigned, 38 women in different parts of the United States are hoping to be called to the Capital soon for final oral examinations.

State Department officials said this group, which took written examinations recently along with 689 men, was one of the largest ever to seek admission to the consular and diplomatic service.

Only six women have won appointments in the past.

Mrs. Rohde, the only woman ever to be named a United States minister, resigned August 30 after her marriage to Capt. Boerge Rohde, of the life guards of King Christian of Denmark. Three others also have resigned because of marriage.

The only women remaining in the service are Miss Frances E. Willis, of Metropolis, Ill., now third secretary of the embassy in Brussels, and Miss Constance Ray Harvey, of Buffalo, N. Y., formerly vice consul at Ottawa and now assigned to duty in Milan, Italy.

Written examination papers of those now seeking to enter the service are being scanned at present. Applicants marked 70 or better will be called to Washington for the oral and determining examinations.

These will be given for eight days, beginning October 13.

Officials declined to disclose the names of any persons taking the examinations.

They recalled that Miss Lucille Atcherson who resigned in 1927, pioneered women's entry into the foreign service. She was the first—in 1922—to pass the examinations.

Mrs. Rohde, the daughter of William Jennings Bryan, and a former Representative from Florida, was appointed minister to Copenhagen by President Roosevelt in April, 1933.

Town's Citizens Buy Mills to Aid Idle Workers

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Sept. 3.—A group of Manchester, N. H., citizens purchased the huge mills of the defunct Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., one of the largest cotton textile plants in the world, for $5,000,000 today.

Manchester bankers, industrialists and business men, organized as the Amoskeag Industries, Inc., for the purpose of selling and leasing the mills for the benefit of Manchester workers, paid $500,000 to Federal Trustee W. Parker Straw, as first payment in the transaction.

Harry L. Davis, treasurer of the organization and treasurer of the Amoskeag Savings Bank, handed over the check that ended the domination of the Amoskeag interests for the first time since the mills were established in 1804.

The mills, where 15,000 worked before the plant closed down a year ago, will be sold or leased to persons guaranteeing to operate them, Arthur E. Moreau, president of the new controlling corporation, asserted.

Moreau said shoe, cotton and woolen interests already have begun negotiations to resume operations in the mills.

Another member of the corporation also disclosed that an offer of several millions of dollars for the plant had been rejected in order to prevent outside and competing interests from "junking" the plant.

Wounded by Policeman, Colored CCC Boy Dies

Lawrence Basey, colored CCC worker, wounded Monday night as he allegedly attempted to prevent a policeman from arresting a companion, died last night in Casualty Hospital. The officer who fired the shot, V. H. Landrum, was being held at the Ninth Precinct Station awaiting action of a coroner's jury tomorrow.

Noted Violinist Soloist Tonight At Watergate

Louis Persinger to Feature Twenty-first Concert of Symphony.

Louis Persinger, distinguished American violinist, will be the soloist at the twenty-first concert of the Washington Summer Concerts Association tonight at the Potomac Watergate. He will be heard in the Beethoven concerto, under the direction of Nikolai Sokolov.

A native of Rochester, Ill., Mr. Persinger went abroad at the age of 13 to study at Leipzig. Four years later he was graduated from the conservatory with the highest honors, and Artur Nikisch, with whom he studied conducting, declared him to be one of the most talented pupils he had ever instructed. A recital tour was followed by two years of study with Eugene Ysaye.

Several tours of Europe and the United States established Mr. Persinger as a brilliant technician and sensitive interpreter. At the outbreak of the World War he was concert master of the Berlin Philharmonic. Returning to America again in 1915, he became concert master and assistant conductor of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. In the world of chamber music he was widely known as the founder and director of the Persinger String Quartet.

As a teacher of violin, Mr. Persinger is justly renowned. His most famous pupil is Yehudi Menuhin, and among his many students who have attained honors on the concert stage are Ruggiero Ricci, Gloria Perkins and Guila Bustabo. In 1934 Mr. Persinger succeeded the late Leopold Auer as head of the violin department of the Juilliard Graduate School.

Dr. Sokolov has announced, in addition to the Beethoven concerto, the following program for tonight's concert: Overture to "Mignon" (Thomas), "Minuet" (Roemheld), "Slavonic Dance" in A flat (Dvorak), "Pomp and Circumstance" March No. 1 (Elgar).

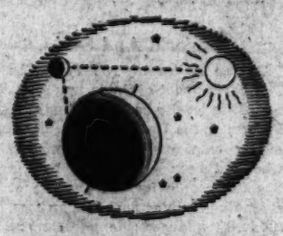
FACTS
every driver should know



Deaths from automobile accidents at night have increased 37% in the past six years.
Deaths from daylight mishaps have decreased 12%.

IN nearly all the reports of these night-time accidents, there is evidence that someone was driving faster than his eyes could see, or into darkness that wasn't dispelled by headlights or highway illumination.

Human eyes are not like owl eyes. Light rays from headlamps do not bend around curves or over hills.

The facts urge every driver who has any thought for himself and his fellowmen to slow down when the sun goes down; to have two self-imposed speed limits—one for clear days, a slower one for nights and bad weather.

Fear the dark as you would a fog, a snow, or a heavy rain.

Read these pertinent extracts from reports of various night-time accidents:

"Ran into rear of truck."

"Didn't see pedestrian till too late to stop."

"Loose gravel threw car off road. Machine turned over twice."

"Blinded by oncoming headlights, crashed car ahead that was slowing down for turn."

"Hit bridge abutment."

"Crashed into wreck of two cars that had collided ten minutes earlier."

And so they go—mostly variations of the fact that people were outdriving their headlights, that they couldn't stop within the range of their own vision.

Moving Back To Industry.

The unobtrusive but competent United States Employment Service has received an allotment of $1,500,000 to recheck all WPA workers. It is constructively assumed that their various activities on the relief rolls will qualify them for new occupational classifications in the registration lists of the Employment Service. With their capabilities properly listed, this agency hopes to hasten transfers to private employment.

In this function of liaison agent between private employers and the jobless, the service made 3,659,000 placements in the 37 months ended July 31. On its records today are the names of more than 6,600,000 persons seeking jobs. Many of these, but not all, are entirely unemployed at present. Some are working for the WPA and others already have private positions but seek to better themselves.

The workless and those in private positions have been impressed with the importance of keeping the service constantly informed of any occupational changes which might enhance their eligibility for new openings. And, through reinterviews, they have helped to keep their registration cards up to the minute. WPA workers, however, perhaps lulled into a sense of security by their regular pay checks, have not heretofore been as faithful in co-operating with the service.

In effect, the recheck should bring the name and potentialities of every last WPA worker into the Employment Service files. This, as all employment experts have long been pointing out, is a step necessary for any scientific handling of the unemployment problem. Employer co-operation will be furthered by the knowledge that the employment exchanges are competent to provide a full occupational history with every man referred to a potential job.

By-Product Of Preparedness.

Without doubt house-cleaning has been effectively stimulated in Czechoslovakia by a recent decree of the government that all attics be cleared as part of a national air-defense campaign. For, in complying with this command, a woman of the village of Klandno discovered, under the eaves of her cottage, what experts are now reported to pronounce as a priceless Rembrandt.

Whenever a New England Primer is excavated from the rubbish of a Connecticut farmhouse, every cupboard from Maine to northern New York is turned out by its chatelaine. It is easy, therefore, to imagine the extralegal obedience which Czech women must now be according those house-cleaning orders from Prague.

There is much dispute as to the desirability of the advice, "In time of peace, prepare for war." But at least one Czech housewife has presumably swung over to the ranks of preparedness advocates. What Rembrandt himself would think of the incident is another story.

Perhaps he would conclude that his famous "Landscape With Ruins" was premature. The theme has become so much more effective since civilization developed the bombing plane.

Labor's Wise Move.

It is encouraging to hear that the belligerent building trades unions have decided to establish machinery for arbitration of the jurisdictional disputes in which they are constantly involved.

The certainty that a split between the Lewis Committee for Industrial Organization and the A. F. of L. will intensify inter-union friction and increase the danger of conflicts, may have given the organized building trades the little push needed to induce action. At any rate, they have acted wisely in taking steps to end inter-union conflicts that often stop construction work for months, costing workers huge sums in lost wages, to say nothing of the expense to employers and inconvenience to the public.

Under the proposed arrangement, all jurisdictional disputes that cannot be settled by direct negotiations between the unions will be referred to Dr. John A. Lapp, with the understanding that work will go on as usual pending announcement of his decision. The selection of Dr. Lapp as arbiter or referee is a fortunate one as he has had wide and successful experience as a negotiator in labor disputes. Furthermore, being an economist and former university professor he has the sort of training conducive to an objective understanding of the problems that will be presented to him.

The fact that the unions realize the folly of their present practices and will voluntarily submit their disputes to an arbiter of their own choosing creates hope that his decisions will be accepted without any bitterness. The success of Dr. Lapp's conciliatory efforts will undoubtedly be greatly assisted by the absence of compulsion. His job is not to dictate to the unions but to help them work together for the best interests of all concerned.

The World Power Conference.

Experts on power and fuel from nearly all parts of the world are assembling in Washington, bringing a wealth of technical information that will be freely exchanged at the third World Power Conference beginning next week. It is especially significant that the social and scientific purposes behind this gathering should bring to our shores the largest foreign delegations ever to come here, at a time when the international political horizon is so darkly clouded.

The World Power Conference was organized in 1924, through the initiative of the late D. N. Dunlop, of Great Britain. Six years ago its second meeting was held in Berlin. At that time an invitation was extended by representatives of the power industry in the United States to hold the next conference in Washington. The conference is therefore not a product of the New Deal, although its sponsorship was taken over by the Administration when it appeared that the private industry had lost interest in the promotion of a world gathering of power experts during a Presidential election year.

Realizing the international significance of the gathering, however, leaders of the private industry are now co-operating fully with the Administration to make it a complete success. Fundamental differences of opinion as to the value of power "yardsticks" set up by the Government, and as to the whole question of public ownership, still persist. This sharp cleavage of opinion will be emphasized when reports representing both viewpoints are read to the conference. Yet all such controversies are likely to be overshadowed by the broader aspects of the international problem of utilizing power for the social and economic advancement of mankind.

Previous world power conferences have been concerned chiefly with technical questions of production and distribution. This gathering will be devoted to the more fundamental problem of "national power economy." It will deal with social and economic as well as technical trends. Discussion will center upon public regulation, national and regional planning, conservation of fuel and water resources, rationalization of distribution and national power and resources policies. On these vital issues will be assembled the best thought of 50 nations.

In such a wide field it would be impossible, of course, to find unanimity of opinion. Many diverse views will be presented. And therein lies the chief value of the conference. The experience of Great Britain and Germany, for example, will be enlightening to the advocates of public ownership as well as to leaders of private industry here. In turn the delegates from these countries will doubtless profit by the discussion of American policies and the inspection tours to sources of power throughout the country.

It is a unique opportunity for all who are interested in the conservation of fuels and the wider distribution of power to study those problems in their international scope. Power is already a most vital influence upon our civilization. In the next few decades it will undoubtedly assume steadily increasing importance. When the leading experts from 50 nations assemble to co-operate in charting the course of progress, a positive mark should be chalked up on the constructive side of current international relations.

A Pioneer in Social Security.

News of the death of Dr. Isaac M. Rubinow, Zionist leader and international secretary of B'nai B'rith, will be received with deep regret in many circles. But nowhere will he be missed more than among economists and social workers acquainted with his pioneer labors in the field of social insurance.

When Dr. Rubinow began his career as writer, lecturer and expert adviser on health and unemployment insurance and old-age pensions, few Americans outside academic circles, and not many on the inside, were actively interested in such problems. Perhaps more than any other single man he demonstrated their importance to his fellow Americans.

Dr. Rubinow was ideally equipped, both by training and by practical experience, to discuss lucidly and authoritatively the many difficult questions that arise in connection with social insurance. As a statistician, holding positions for many years in both public and private employment, he had that understanding of the complicated details of his subject in which many theoretical economists are dangerously deficient. Moreover, as a physician and social worker he possessed specialized knowledge and experience in dealing with the sick, the aged and the helpless which no doubt strengthened his belief in the principles for which he sought practical application.

Although his work in furthering the cause of social security was only one among many lines of activity carried on by Dr. Rubinow in the course of a busy life, perhaps curtailed by his consuming zeal, it is the particular contribution which has made his name known to thousands of persons unacquainted with his general career. Others will carry forward the movement which he helped to launch. That happens to many pioneers in all fields of human endeavor. But few of them are as fortunate as Dr. Rubinow in living long enough to be assured that their labors have borne fruit and their exertions have not been vain.

In one form or another, the program of social security which he sought to establish in America has come to stay.

The True Freedom Of Mind.

The conflict between intellectual freedom and the totalitarian state was reduced to its essence in the address delivered by Prof. Etienne Gilson, of the University of Paris, at the Harvard tercentenary conference of arts and sciences. Only by preservation of the scientific viewpoint, by appealing to reality in place of idealism, he believes, can the encroachments of dictatorship be avoided.

"Whether we like it or not," Prof. Gilson said, "the sad fact is that after losing our common faith, our common philosophy and our common art, we are in great danger of losing even our common science and of exchanging it for State-controlled dogmas." This danger was unmistakably linked to the wishful thinking of contemporary civilization—the tendency to "say what things ought to be" instead of considering what they are. Although it is sometimes necessary to read between the lines of his philosophical discussion, Prof. Gilson clearly summarizes the social dangers which have emanated from the teachings of Rousseau.

"Idealism," says this philosopher, "is a natural temptation of the human mind; in our every-day life . . . we almost invariably say what things ought to be, if they conformed to our mind. We do not shape our ideas after the pattern of things, but rather the things after the pattern of our own ideas. Is that freedom? No, but rather slavery. What can liberate our mind from its own prejudices? A careful examination of things as they are—that and nothing else. And this is realism."

In his enthusiasm for "reality" Prof. Gilson perhaps takes too much for granted. His frequent reference to "universal truth" raises plenty of unanswerable questions as to what is truth. Every dogmatist is inclined to regard his theory as "universal truth." Prof. Gilson's address would have been more satisfying if he had defined that term in such a way as to exclude unproved theories and even scientific postulations that have not yet been definitely established. But assuming that his "universal truth" is equivalent to demonstrable fact, his thesis is irrefutable.

It is the custom of the day to place a great deal of emphasis upon the expression of mental concepts that have no relationship to fact. The result, according to Prof. Gilson, is that we have too many philosophies and too few minds. Mere fancy can enrich artistic production, but it has no place in philosophy or in government. As the French lecturer so ably points out, "the true freedom of mind is to yield to the teachings of fact; to reject our own preconceived ideas every time somebody else is able to show us that they are wrong."

Prof. Gilson left the specific application of his philosophy to his audience. But his apprehension over the progress of totalitarian rule points the direction of his thinking. Failure "to judge things as they are" becomes a first step toward organized demands for what the masses want. Then the reins of government are placed in the hands of leaders who are not willing to "submit to reality."

Those leaders proceed with a program based upon a popular conception of what ought to be, with very little regard for the materials they have to work with or the actual conditions they must meet. When such a program fails, reversion to dictatorship is inevitable.

A missionary to the South Sea islands reports that it is becoming increasingly difficult to keep the native women in clothing. Same over here, brother.

Long-legged Uncle Sam is well adapted to maintaining a neutral position. He can straddle the fence and still keep both feet on the ground.

It seems that no matter where shooting breaks out on this globe, there's invariably a bunch of Americans present to do a lot of unnecessary innocent bystanding.

M. D.s And Poison Gas.

From the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Having regretfully reached the conclusion that the politicians are failing in their duty to civilization, the British Medical Association is planning to seek the co-operation of members of the medical profession the world over in an effort to abolish the use of poison gas in warfare.

At a recent meeting of the British organization in Oxford, the prime minister was quoted as saying there is no known defense against "air raids and their dire consequences," and the association went on record as unreservedly condemning poison gas in warfare as "inhuman in its results and degrading to civilization."

Discussing the possibility of raids over Britain, one of the physicians pointed out that anything like an "effective" defensive measure would mean the spectacle of 45,000,000 persons, including babies, wearing gas masks. This is no news to the British political leaders, however. They are living in an agony of fear that such a spectacle may become a reality in the not-too-distant future.

There was nothing in the dispatches from England to indicate how the physicians hoped to achieve success in their world-wide campaign against the dreaded poison gas, in view of the "failure" of the politicians; but certainly the generality of mankind will wish them well.

Veterans' Trial Balloon?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The article by Robert C. Albright in The Post of September 1, titled "Pension Whip by Veterans Is Threatened," serves two purposes: First, it may be rated as "news," even though it is another dose of an endless theme; second, it is a grand trial balloon which veterans' organizations may use to determine whether the time is yet ripe to publicize their contemplated next raid on the Treasury.

This small voice warns that the time will never be ripe for another Treasury raid by the mercenary crews which guide the destinies of Amerlcan World War veterans' organizations—that is, without sounding the death knell of said organizations' political importance. The next batch of pseudo-public servants who vote for a veterans' grab of the magnitude of the prepaid bonus will find themselves, rather than their bitter pill, traveling down the American taxpayers' large esophagus.

I wonder if I represent the average nonveteran American's point of view when I affirm that the tactics of our glorious doughboys (Nickname! How aptly art thou chosen!) or their selected representatives fairly smell to high heaven. And if I don't represent that average point of view it's good-by solvency. Can't say that I blame them for beating the tambourine, however. Uncle Sam, under the new arrangement of open-handed largesse to noisy minorities, has become the most notorious sucker the modern world has ever known. 'Round about us rings that gloating cry: "I got mine!"

SMALL GULLET.
Washington, Sept. 2.

Increasing Armaments.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: All thoughtful observers realize that the leading nations with enormously increasing armament expenses are headed for a crash. And the United States is not excepted from this conclusion. Our Government has just decided to build two warships at a cost of $50,000,000 each. Two bombs would instantly destroy them. And another enormous increase for armaments over last year has just been announced. This cost is bound to increase by algebraic progression. Ministers of the gospel are praying earnestly that we shall be spared the horrors of war, but nobody is doing anything about it in a rational way. Fear is the force which is driving us onward, and the competitive armament race continues.

Jesus of Nazareth was ready with a solution of just this difficulty nearly two thousand years ago. His philosophy of non-resistance is exactly the philosophy that should be applied today. There is no other way. Christian people go to church to worship Him submissively on Sundays. On other days they inferentially call Him a fool for endorsing non-resistance.

The United States could immediately reduce its expenses for armaments about nine-tenths, maintaining only a naval police system. This example would be quickly followed by the other nations. In fact, Holland and Denmark have already set us the right example. We have failed to understand the enormous propaganda constantly exerted by the munitions makers, army and navy associations, and patriotic societies. The Congress should be commanded by the people to stop this enormous cost of armaments.

Non-Peeper's Suggestion.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter in a recent issue signed "Proud (and angry) Father" was delightfully witty, and surely no one can fail to sympathize with his point of view.

However, I am wondering whether the "old fashioned institution of child raising" should not properly be the complement of the old fashioned institution of a detached house. Or, for cases where that is impracticable, why not have apartments especially for families with babies. Then one "whayeh" would nullify another, and none could justly complain.

A periodic outburst of a loud protesting wail is a potential possibility in the little "knockouts" of the best regulated of families, and I don't believe that a few years ago, even this proud father would have enjoyed hearing the other fellow's youngster, unless he is the kind who himself has always stopped a carriage and peeped inside.

I'm not! ELEANOR ADAMS.

Preaching The Gospel.

To the editor of The Post—Sir: It is interesting to see a letter from a clergyman in your issue of August 29—the Rev. A. H. Thompson.

I am sorry he did not refer to the habit in these days of delivering secular discourses in lieu of sermons which means preaching the gospel from a scriptural text. The new and irregular system of conducting a church has become so common in this city that the best element of their church members are becoming discouraged. The great preachers of the past, and even now, acquired their fame by adhering strictly to preaching the gospel. R. LAPPIN.

'We Must Talk Peace.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am an invalid woman dying with cancer and have been so poorly of late that I do not pretend to keep up with the news, but I hear enough to know that war is in the air. I had hoped the world had learned its lesson from the war that broke out in 1914. There have been many gestures made toward world peace, but sometimes it looks as if public sentiment can be changed almost over night.

The purpose of this letter is to endeavor to point out what an important place the newspapers hold in things of this kind. From my observations, people generally get what they talk about and clamor for.

Too much publicity is given to war and its preparation. Our country has been claiming to want peace, so let's have peace. Oh! in the name of suffering humanity let me implore you to use the pages of your paper wholly to advocate peace.

Even to print everything that chances to come out as news keeps up a state of excitement until the people generally are finally made to believe that they are being wronged and are justified in fighting. Alas, they find too late that they have not been fighting for their own rights.

If we want war let us continue to talk and write about war. If we want peace we must talk peace, prepare for peace and bend every effort in that direction. God grant that our Nation, yea, the world, may wake up to this truth.

The World And Spain.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The government of Spain was elected just as legally as that of England, France, or the United States. Some of its employes, military officers who had been paid wages by the Spanish people for the purpose of defending them against foreign foes, suddenly attacked the government and people that had hired them and fed them.

The government was one recognized by all powers and in friendly relations with all. In accordance with the customs known as international law, the governments of the other peoples were supposed to give no aid to the rebelling officers and were supposed to put no obstacles to the government's purchase of supplies.

It became obvious from the start that those rebelling against their government were receiving airplanes and ammunition from foreign countries, in such quantities as to make it unbelievable that their governments were unaware of the fact. Those countries had recognized the legally constituted government of Spain. Therefore, those governments were flouting the rules of the game. Their aid to the rebels was foul play.

In view of this, the other countries, shocked and virtuous, decided to also discard the rules of the game and also favored the rebellious employes against their legitimate government. That is, they refused to sell the government the supplies it needed to combat the rebellion. So now it is unanimous. All countries banded against the government elected by the people of Spain.

Is such behavior going to induce Spaniards to trust to ballots and not to bullets? Is it going to foster the faith in ballots as against bullets among the masses of those very same countries that put on the same plane the government chosen by ballots and the perjuring employes that trust only to bullets?

Government Financial Advisers Asked.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: From time to time provision is being made for the unemployed worker and all those in the lower social scale, but what is being done for the educated middle class? Teachers who have spent years in the service do not know where to turn for advice. They do not wish charity, only to know how to get back on their feet and continue to be self-supporting.

The boarding house has offered a temporary means for earning a living, but is now failing them. At its best, it is a risky business. This summer with every other house a boarding or rooming house and with Government workers seeking country residences and taking long vacations, rent has piled up with insufficient income to meet expenses. To give up is to burn all one's boats, to keep on seems impossible. Particularly is this true of those beyond middle age, in sound health and glad to support themselves.

The Government is apparently much interested in the economic struggle of human beings and is making attempts to better their condition. It has made a beginning, but can it not broaden its endeavors? Can it not create a group of advisers to those who need direction when entangled in financial difficulties? Often a half hour of wise advice would remove the unbearable burdens of many highly educated men and women beyond middle age who have always been self-supporting and able to earn a living, but are now in deep water because of recent hard years. Such a board composed of wise, sympathetic men and women would be a refuge for many unfortunate persons who must give up the struggle unless somebody comes to their aid.

Why would it not be possible to educate men and women along the lines of advisers to those in financial difficulty just as physicians attend to physical well being? It would defeat the object of its creation if fees were high, but partially supported by the city or State or Federal Government and with reasonable charges it would help in placing thousands of educated, hard-working men and women on their feet. Is there at present any office of the Government where such assistance can be obtained.

The Post Impressionist

Literature On The Ellipse.

Post Office, Friday.

He sat loosely on a bench in the Ellipse, watching a ball-game in which nobody else evinced even his slight interest—except its vastly interested participants.

You might say: "He was ragged. His eyes were dull. When he smiled, his teeth were black—those that remained. He was, and smelt, unwashed. He was a symbol of waste, and willing waste."

Or you might say: "He was as tattered as the beggars who sun themselves before a mosque. His eyes looked through and beyond immediate objects. Although, when he smiled, his teeth resembled a bhang-chewers, his smile contained nothing earthly. He had the odor of poverty, yet was a symbol of something beyond both poverty and wealth."

And each of these statements would be true.

He said: "Why shouldn't I be lousy? Life is."

Yet, a bit later, he said: "I like to watch the sunrise better'n the sunset. The sunrise makes me half believe I'll get a better break. But the sunset somehow makes me think about when I was a kid—I'm never goin' to get the breaks I got then."

And the Post-Impressionist maintains that each of these sentiments was an authentic expression of the man.

One mentions the incident here because, as you may remember, the Column let itself in for a merry controversy, some while ago, by calling both realism and romanticism extreme views of a single object—and because you will soon (just as soon as it is published) be hearing a lot about John T. McIntyre's new novel, which Farrar & Rinehart are bringing out: "Steps Going Down."

Your columnist hasn't yet finished reading the book—may well disagree with its totality. But, so far, it is better art than any modern story he has read in two or three years. And he doesn't believe it to be either the romance that nobody will call it or the "unflinching work of realism" which it will be called by nine out of ten critics.

"The street was narrow and dreary; there were rubbish-cans along the curb; small children were trying to play, and a dog scratched himself." That's the kind of passage on which those critics are going to paste their label.

"Steps Going Down" is the story of tough Pete doing a hideout while the gumshoes are trailing him. It is a chronicle of dips and snuffers, shady lodging-houses, more than shady "girls"—of a skilfully individualized, though uncommonly numerous, collection of losers at the life-game. They all look, behave, talk convincingly.

Then comes such a passage as the following, about a man returning to the house in which he was brought up:

"He'd been away for 45 years. Then one night he had a desire to go back. The spring had come, and he'd awakened, listening. He saw himself as a boy—the days when the sun was splendid, and the nights with the moon riding beautifully in the sky. * * * And he'd gone back.

"A great curtain of mist hung from the moon, dulling things. He'd dreaded this, for it was the thing he'd put there. He'd put it there with his own hands. It was made of his desire to get on in the world.

"When he'd been a boy, there was a deal of moon in his life. He'd like to watch it across the rims of buildings; and it gave him pleasure to see it hang white and full over the street. He'd sit in its light, and he'd feel strange and different. The rays seemed to find their way into all the ways of the mind: they'd make common things unusual. They'd make unreality real.

"As he grew up, people warned him against it. For boys, maybe, it was all right, but when the boy grew up it got in the way. People all agreed, if he was to make anything of himself, he'd have to be practical.

"And by and by, he believed them. He was 16. He began to be like other people; and one of the first things he did was to hang the curtain across the moon. And he'd never really seen it since; its light had never really fallen on him.

* * *

"And, now he was back in the old street with the quiet of the summer nights about him, he wanted to see it as he used to see it. He wanted its full roundness, its still whiteness, the strange good of its light. He wanted things to be as they were when he was a boy."

* * *

This, your columnist submits, is essentially as much realism as the actions of the sniffers and dips. He submits that, essentially, the actions of the dips and sniffers are as romantic as this. He submits that the difference is merely a difference between the ways in which the various elements are observed and recorded—and that both ways are art.

But he submits that all these elements grouped together—when they can be artistically grouped together—are more than art.

For then they are life.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

The Scientist's Life.

Surely the most comfortable realm in which man may live outside the state of total ignorance is that inhabited by scientists of the kind who are now holding a sort of intellectual state fair at Harvard, proudly exhibiting their prize pumpkins of learning and talking shop in a jargon all their own.

Here are giants who examine the human race through a strong glass as we scramble through our split-second existence, breeding, fighting, toiling, splitting into groups to practice racial and international cannibalism at the expense of weaker groups, whooping after microbe leaders, scattering abruptly in all directions and coalescing into new groups, which then fall upon old friends in an endless turmoil within the horizon of a pin point.

The detachment of these men who are of us yet live in the clouds would seem to isolate them from the mountainous trivialities which make impossible the peace for which we are always fighting. They study our behavior by masses and by individual bugs and compare it to the conduct of generations of bugs which fought and died ten minutes ago—so far back that their existence may be read only in faint traces on the slide.

* * * *

They find us unchanged in our fundamental character and conduct, for greed and fear of the next man control our existence and our gods are invoked to command the slaughter of bugs on the other side of a hair line.

They find us more numerous than we were a few minutes ago, when our ancestors chattered in the trees, but, though we breed more rapidly, we also invent weapons and vapors to kill thousands by remote control. It seems to us that our pin point is overcrowded and insufficient to support so many, but the eye squinting through the microscope takes in the perimeter of our dot and observes that our trouble is congestion, the gregariousness of bands. If we would only spread out we would find plenty of room.

Being of us, though apart from us, the scientist can understand the sounds which we call language, and thus study our superstitions, many of which, as the detached intelligence plainly perceives, are fostered and defended by force of arms to the prevention of peace with the smear. They are often amused by the pretensions of one group of bugs to a civilization superior to that of another group.

They were hilarious last fall when some of the white groups laughed at the warriors of the Ethiopian group who groveled on the ground in an ecstasy of warlike ardor before their emperor and their tribal priests, receiving a mandate from their primitive gods on going out to fight the Italians.

The scientists could see that there was not the slightest difference between the hysteria of the Ethiopian braves and that of a hundred thousand Italians who stood in a great public square facing a comic bug on a balcony draped with flags shouting "Doo-chay!" and leaping in the air with tears running down their cheeks.

* * * *

From their position and with their scientific notes on past performances they could see that this war was simply another outbreak of the old cannibalism, a case of a strong group of bugs devouring a weak group, while boasting of its civilization. And, still more interesting, the Italians in the tiny miniature also went away believing, as the Ethiopians did, that the Great Spirit was angry at their enemies and wanted them rebuked.

The scientist does not get much money, but that is nothing to him, for he knows money is merely a primitive system of markers or tokens by which the bugs measure their tiny possessions and their little success in the twinkling span of their existence.

True, his wife and kids, being bugs, no doubt want magnificent flea-circus cars reduced 10,000 diameters in which to ride around and impress other bugs. But the scientist himself is away off, somewhere aloof from such desires. He thinks in aeons and millions of light years of distance and wonders what sort of bugs he might bring into the field if he could obtain a smear from some other planet. He allows, of course, for the possibility that he might be just a microbe himself to the intellect of his unknown neighbor from another and bigger world—this one the size of a dime, perhaps.

Cotton planters say the Negro field hand is the happiest man alive, too ignorant to worry or aspire and just content to be. An enviable state, to be sure, but the scientist is too learned to worry or bother his head with earthly ambitions, and think of the fun he has peering at the pompous antics, the alarms and fights, emotions and passions of the bugs.

Ocean Gold Quest Halted by Weather

Highlands, N. J., Sept. 2 (AP).—Bad weather and radio trouble forced the treasure-hunting schooner Constellation to give up, at least temporarily, its quest for gold, Coast Guards were advised today.

The four-masted ship, which sailed from Jersey City August 20 for the spot off the Virginia Capes where the steamship Merida sank 25 years ago, hove into Sandy Hook Harbor last night. Coast Guards said it remained at anchor there today.

Future plans of the treasure hunters were not learned. The Constellation carried Capt. Alvin Loesche, his wife, four divers and a crew of 22 when it set sail on what was to have been a two months' voyage. The goal was the reputed cargo of $10,000,000 worth of jewelry and bullion which the Merida was said to have carried.

Bay State Anniversary

Massachusetts, Celebrating 25th Year Of Direct Primary, Sees Considerable Opposition To Gov. Curley Developing.

By Earl G. Latham.

Special Correspondent of The Post.

Boston.

WITH THE CLOSING of nominations for the September primaries, it becomes increasingly evident that Mr. Curley will have a substantial opposition in the person of Robert Greenwood, Mayor of Fitchburg. The primaries this year have a special significance of their own, however, for 1936 marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the introduction of a State-wide machinery for direct nominations. It would be difficult to find a year when the merits and shortcomings of the system have been more clearly demonstrated.

For a time, the Democratic lists had a surfeit of candidates seeking to be nominated for the United States Senate, but, as a result of sacrifices made in the interest of a united front against the Governor, the opposition has been simplified and concentrated. Joseph Hurley, present Lieutenant Governor, was the first to announce his candidacy for the seat being vacated by Senator Marcus Coolidge. Mr. Hurley has felt that he was done in the eye by the Governor at the primary convention in the matter of the nomination for the governorship.

Friends of Senator Coolidge sought to persuade him to be a candidate to succeed himself, but these efforts failed. The Senator was not without his champions, however, for Mayor of Boston Frederick W. Mansfield and Mayor of Fitchburg Greenwood—who is also Senator Coolidge's son-in-law—declared their intention to contest the nomination in the primaries.

It was apparent even before these announcements that an effective opposition was impossible if divided among a number of loyalties. Hurley took the lead in sponsoring the idea of supporting one candidate of the three in the field. The first to withdraw was Mansfield and the second was Hurley himself when he had talked the matter over with Greenwood. There was some feeling that the latter was a rather colorless choice to do battle with the Governor, and that he was both deficient in dramatic values and in the ability to create them out of the stuff of the campaign. He has since proved otherwise, however.

In the event that Curley wins over Greenwood in the primary, he will have to contest a potentially more dangerous opposition in the candidacy of Thomas O'Brien, Vice Presidential nominee of the Union Party, and the Union Party's choice for the United States Senate from Massachusetts. Greenwood's bid will have to be made in the primaries, for he has not entered as an independent to insure his running after the primaries have been held. O'Brien, however, has not been inclined to depend only upon the slim chance of wresting the nomination from Curley in the primary battle, but is committed to a campaign right down to the day of the election.

O'Brien comes from Boston and is an Irish Catholic, a combination of qualifications which make him an attractive candidate to the very elements upon which Curley's strength depends. Although the Governor is well known for his resourcefulness in the face of strong opposition, he is going to be hard put to attain the senatorship, the highest goal upon which he has yet set his sights.

Primary System Seen Not Entirely Successful.

ON ITS twenty-fifth anniversary, it cannot be said that the primary system has entirely justified the predictions of its sponsors that it would correct the abuses of a corrupt, or potentially corrupt, machinery of nomination by convention and caucus. The theory of the primary was that ancient textbook adage that the cure for the ills of democracy is more democracy. It was designed to do away with machine-tailored candidates as much as possible, and to encourage independent candidacies in the hope of attracting better men to public office, men with no dependence upon political machines.

The convention was not, of course, abolished with the introduction of the primary, for the pre-primary convention came into being to make known the official indorsements of the parties in the field. In the Republican Party, the decision of the convention is invariably ratified at the primary. Occasionally a candidate dissents from the convention choice, as in the case of Frank Goodwin, who ran for Governor in 1934 on both the Republican and independent tickets. But there was scarcely the semblance of a contest in the primary election, as the orthodox Republican candidate won handily.

The Democratic Party usually goes through an agony of indecision and turmoil before the nominations are finally made. In fact, it is customary for the party to hold a second or harmony convention after the primaries are over to work out a truce among discordant elements for co-operation in the ensuing campaign. Because of the split in the Democratic Party between the Boston and western factions, it is sometimes possible to appeal from the decision of the convention to the primary with success. Curley himself did this in his campaign for the governorship in 1934. Frozen out by the Ely-Walsh strength in the convention, he took his case to the primaries and won the nomination from the convention candidate.

It is, then, indeed possible for non-machine candidates to campaign in the primaries, and it is beneficial that they do so when the convention has been oppressive or when a legitimate issue is in danger of being suppressed. But this is a far different matter from the rush of trivial candidates seeking to get their names on the primary ballot. Every election year brings out great numbers thirsting with a desire to serve the public at great personal sacrifice to themselves, always at the insistent persuasion of friends and admirers.

Fake Independents Used To Prevert Primary's Aim.

THE MANIPULATION of fake independent candidacies is a more serious perversion of the primary system, however. Spurious candidates campaigning on purely tactical issues are false to an electorate which can secure genuine representation only if the democratic process is untainted. In this respect the primary system lends itself to the interjection of independent candidates whose only effect is to split the vote of the opposition.

The Goodwin already referred to ran as an independent in 1934 after having failed to make any inroads in the support of the convention-named Republican candidate for the governorship in the primaries. He was nominally a Republican and expected to draw his support from the Republican ranks. As it happened, the combined votes of the Republican candidate and Goodwin would not have been enough to have defeated Curley. After the latter's inauguration, Goodwin was made registrar of motor vehicles.

In the current campaign another nominal Republican will run as an independent for the Governorship in opposition to the pre-primary convention's choice, a choice, incidentally which will undoubtedly be confirmed by the primary. The independent candidate is a Republican who has been conspicuous as an appointed office holder in a solidly Democratic administration.

Because the pre-primary conventions are held in the late spring, the campaign in any election year stretches out unduly. From April until November the electorate is cajoled, warned, wheedled and intimidated. It is not evident that this siege of the voter's patience and attention results in the selection of better men to office, unless the survival of the most rugged of them is the survival of the fittest.

THERE ARE many political venerables who feel that the primary does not justify the expense it entails. Most, however, will agree that there are two aspects to the charge that the primary diffuses responsibility. In one sense any elective officer is responsible to the electorate which put him in office. A candidate who reaches power after being nominated by a convention can be defeated as thoroughly as one who obtained his nomination via the direct primary. But in a more direct sense responsibility is diffused. Identification with a platform and a party tends to keep a candidate within whatever bounds his sense of loyalty imposes upon him. Infractions of the canons of party regularity have been known to bring upon the culprit the penalty of political excommunication.

the direct primary system in Massachusetts is demonstrating its uses and abuses. An appropriate birthday motto would be: Mere changes in the machinery of politics are unavailing without corresponding improvements in the men who run it.

Soviet's Third Five-Year Plan To Stress Home

Better Schools, Newspapers, Clothing, Housing Goal by End of '42.

By Dr. Jules I. Bogen.

Editor in Chief, New York Journal of Commerce.

By the United Press.

Moscow, Sept. 3.—Residential construction and manufacture of clothing and other consumer goods will receive chief emphasis in the third five-year plan, which Soviet authorities already have begun to discuss.

Expansion of cultural activities, such as newspapers and in schools, also will be pressed.

The third five-year plan will cover the period from 1938 to 1942. Actually, Soviet Russia economy is conducted primarily on the basis of annual plans. Over the next three months, for example, quotas for 1937 production, operating records and unit costs for major divisions of industry and trade will be set up by a state planning commission and various commissariats will fix them for trusts and individual plants throughout the country. The annual control figures involve deviations from the second five-year plan, coming to a close next year, but generally will be quite close to the latter.

Aim at U. S. Standards.

A prominent Soviet official conversant with American conditions ventures the view that by the close of the third five-year plan in 1942 the standard of living of the population will closely approach that of employed workers in advanced countries of western Europe, and that by the end of the fourth five-year plan it will begin to approach that of the United States.

If the progress achieved in the past three years is to be projected in the future this prediction seems reasonable, except for automobiles and perhaps housing.

The first five-year plan was frankly designed to establish an "industrial base" for the country. Stress was laid entirely on iron and steel plants and railroad construction. The second five-year plan shifted the emphasis to consumers' goods. As a result, as far as many staple food products are concerned, Soviet Russia now possesses plentiful supplies for the population at prices in some cases not far above the world level.

Most articles of clothing are still scarce, and thus are high-priced. However, and the situation will not be corrected for a few years unless there is some change, the present policy leads to imports of textiles for clothing.

Housing Shortage Acute.

In urban housing the Soviet Union is still backward, compared with more advanced industrial nations. The situation is an especially difficult one. There was a great housing shortage in Russian cities, based on modern standards, even before the war. Residential construction all but stopped during the war and the years of civil strife following. More than 15 per cent of all structures were destroyed during that period, it has been estimated.

When building activity began to revive, the intensive industrial program caused a major shift in the population from rural areas to cities. The urban population of the country ten years ago was approximately 17 per cent. Today it is about 25 per cent. At the same time the total population of the country was increased more than 20,000,000.

In many communities families of two or three persons have but one room. Renting of apartments in new houses has often been similarly restricted to spread available facilities. In several new factory towns where apartments were built along with industrial plants the situation is better.

Under the new five-year plans now taking shape there will be vast production of goods. Public works will not be neglected, however. Vigorous efforts will be made to complete such major projects as modernizing Moscow.

Button Letter

By William Lyon Phelps.

Gwinnett's Story.

Exactly two months ago I wrote in this column an account of Button Gwinnett, who signed the Declaration of Independence and was killed in Georgia in a duel.

This article drew an interesting letter from my friend, Mr. William E. Bush, of Augusta, Ga., who writes,

"If you will carefully look into Mr. Gwinnett's history to the extent that it is known, I think you will find the following:

"1. That nobody today knows whether his name was 'Button' or 'Bulton' Gwinnett, nor does his autograph clearly indicate which of these names is correct.

2. A careful search of English genealogies fails to show any person of either his Christian or surname. In other words, no one called 'Button' as a first name has ever been heard of, nor is any name resembling 'Gwinnett' recorded in any place which has been found by any genealogical authority.

"I have read, but cannot tell you where, that Gwinnett spent his early life in France, and the suggestion has been made that the name Gwinnett is the French diminutive of 'Gwin' or 'Little Gwinn.'

"'Gwyn' is a well known Welsh name, and many members of this family emigrated into the fertile country of the south and west of England, where their name was anglicized as 'Gwinn.'

"I apologize for writing at such length, but Gwinnett to have been a signer of the Declaration of Independence has left behind such a meagre record, and tradition, that anything concerning him must interest one who is inclined to devote time and thought to Colonial history."

Landon Leads Roosevelt, 2-1, In Digest Poll

Scattered Returns Cover Sections of 4 States; Big Cities Excluded.

New York, Sept. 3.—Gov. Landon leads President Roosevelt by over two to one in the first scattered returns from four Eastern States—New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Maine—in the Literary Digest's Presidential poll.

The combined vote, being published in the Literary Digest issue of September 5, shows 16,056 votes for Landon and 7,645 for Roosevelt.

The magazine states that none of the ballots came from New York City, Philadelphia or Pittsburgh, "where President Roosevelt's strength is claimed by so many political observers to be greatest."

Out of 24,689 ballots, the votes for other candidates follow: Lemke (Union), 754; Thomas (Socialist), 109; Browder (Communist), 70; Colvin (Prohibition), 34; Aiken (Socialist-Labor), 11; others, 10.

Landon's lead is greatest in Maine, 1,831 to Roosevelt's 522 votes.

New Jersey voters sent in 2,660 ballots marked for the Republican candidate and 1,621 for the Democratic nominee.

Early returns from New York show the President trailing with 2,724 to his opponent's 5,931.

Pennsylvania, one of six States for Hoover four years ago, gave 5,634 to its native son, Landon, and 2,778 to Roosevelt.

The analysis of the vote for Lemke shows he is getting four votes from former Roosevelt voters to one from erstwhile Hoover supporters. But his total is only fractionally over 3 per cent.

"What the political dopsters will look for in this first tabulation," said the magazine article, "and those to come, are the switches from 1932.

"In Maine, 'the Barometer State,' Landon gets 246 who voted for Roosevelt in 1932 as compared with 85 who then voted Republican and now favor Roosevelt.

"In New Jersey, Landon gets 407 who were Democratic in 1932, while Roosevelt takes over 304 Republican voters.

"In New York, Landon gets 1,146 Democratic votes while 509 who voted Republican in the 1932 switch to the President.

"In Pennsylvania, 915 Democrats vote for Landon and 509 Republicans for Roosevelt."

The Presidential poll of the American Institute of Public Opinion, printed in The Post on August 23, indicated Gov. Alf M. Landon was leading in the same four States in which he was given a lead yesterday in the preliminary poll conducted by the Literary Digest.

The Institute poll, however, showed Landon's lead to be far smaller than that indicated by the Digest. While the Digest poll thus far covers only certain sections of the States and does not include New York City, Philadelphia or Pittsburgh, the Institute poll represents a cross-section of all of each State.

The Institute poll of August 23 showed the following standing, expressed in percentages:

	Roosevelt.	Landon.	Lemke.
Maine	31.4	61	5.9
New York	45.4	47.7	4.8
New Jersey	44.3	49.6	4.8
Pennsylvania	44.9	49	4.3

Complete results of another poll of the Nation will be published in The Post Sunday.

To Wage Peace

Bruussels Host To International Congress Designed To Promote World Harmony; Many Americans Attending..

By Violet K. Libby.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Brussels.

REPRESENTING many different points of view, but united in a common front against the increasing menace of war, delegates from all over the world are gathered here for the first International Peace Congress. Under the leadership of Viscount Cecil, of England, and the French Minister for Air, Pierre Cot, hundreds of determined men and women are endeavoring to organize an aggressive and coordinated campaign against the common scourge of civilization.

The past few years have seen a tremendous growth in peace sentiment, but the day of a passive sentimental acceptance of the principles of peace is long since past. Peace organizations are no longer satisfied, as Dean Inge so trenchantly put it, "to resemble a flock of sheep passing a resolution in favor of vegetarianism while the wolves still have a liking for mutton."

For the first time in history millions of people of all nationalities are combining through the Brussels congress in a solidarity of purpose which has behind it a sheer weight of numbers and voting strength that is without precedent. That purpose is to wage an active militant campaign for world peace.

Thirty-three countries have sent large national committees, among them representatives of every sphere of life from high government officials to the humblest agricultural worker, many of them with the cordial co-operation of their respective governments.

Thirty well-known men and women, representing many different organizations, have sailed from America to take part in the congress, and Canada has sent a large delegation. Leon Blum has given his support to the congress, President Benes of Czechoslavakia has taken part in the campaign, the U. S. S. R. is sending a delegation and others are coming from as far away as the Philippines, Australia, New Zealand and China.

Four Major Points Laid Down By Assembly.

FOUR POINTS which are laid down as the basic program of the congress are the recognition of the sanctity of treaty obligations; the reduction and limitation of armaments by international agreement and the suppression of profit from the manufacture and trade in arms; strengthening of the League of Nations for the prevention and stopping of war by the organization of collective security and mutual assistance; and the establishment within the framework of the League of Nations of effective machinery for remedying international conditions which might lead to war.

Not all those taking part, however, are committed to all points. As John Nevin Sayre, leader of the American delegation, points out: "A number of our American peace organizations joining in the congress all do not give unqualified adhesion to all of the "Four Points," but since the essence of peacemaking consists in the bringing into conference of viewpoints which are not alike, all are coming in the spirit of conciliation and the expectation that on all sides there will be that deepest basis of sincerety and fraternity on which alone co-operation can be established.

"To prevent war it is necessary to wage peace. And peace has no hope of victory today unless it can be waged by the co-operation of the people and organizations who want peace in all nations. To effect such world-wide co-operation and move towards unity of action on lines that are practically effective is a task of life and death importance for our time. No one organization, no single conference can accomplish it. There must be various approaches from different origins, and a step by step coming together, and trial and error and indomitable courage in pressing on."

President Benes Sees Europe's Hopes On Democracy.

SPEAKING at a conference of the International Peace Campaign which met recently in Prague, President Benes of Czechoslovakia emphasized the fundamental problems which must be solved before peace can be assured.

"One of the greatest difficulties in Europe at the present time," he said, "and the one which produces the greatest friction and in consequence the gravest danger, is the difference of political and social regimes in the various countries, and their mutual propaganda the one against the other. Whether one approves of those regimes or not, one must have the courage to make the point quite clear—without mutual respect for each other's regimes, war will be much more possible.

"In my opinion the democratic Europeans are prepared to make new contributions to peace. Clearly, they demand similar contributions from other regimes. They have, in this case, so much more than rights which they must defend by every means at their command."

The determination that the voice of the people, rather than that of the professional diplomat, shall be heard in the peace councils of the future, is the keynote of the congress, which will co-ordinate into one vast army the many forces which are working for peace, and will give definite leadership and direction to the efforts which are springing up all over the world.

On the American delegation are Dr. H. Atkinson, Church Peace Union and World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches; Mrs. F. Brewer Boeckel, National Council for the Prevention of War; Dr. Ben Cherrington, Institute of International Education; D. Davis, national council, Y. M. C. A.; Malcolm W. Destroyer Bagley Launched by U. S.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 3 (AP).—The third ship to be named for Ensign Worth Bagley, U. S. N., slid down the ways at the Norfolk Navy Yard today.

The 1,500-ton United States destroyer, constructed at a cost of about $4,000,000, was launched under the sponsorship of Miss Belle Worth Bagley, of Washington, sister of Ensign Bagley, who was killed May 1, 1898, in the attack of Spanish batteries at Cardenas, Cuba, while attached to the U. S. S. Winslow, torpedo boat.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

'No European Wants War.'

"Do you think there will be a general war in Europe, Mr. Twitchell?"

"Oh, no. Nobody in Europe really wants war, you know."

"How did you find the situation in France?"

"It was quite disorderly. There is pronounced nervousness and many signs of a crisis. The French are greatly alarmed over the way Germany is arming. But nobody wants war over there."

"Did you go to Spain?"

"Yes, and I was lucky to get out alive. It was frightful. Here I saw revolution in its most atrocious aspect. People were being shot down by firing squads everywhere. It was murder. A spark could be touched off there that might plunge all Europe into carnage. But, of course, you find nobody who wants a world war over there."

"Did you visit Russia?"

"Yes, and Russia is working overtime preparing to act in self-defense. But you don't find anybody over there who is, what I mean, anxious for war."

* * * *

"How did you find things in Italy?"

"Italy under Mussolini has 8,000,000 men ready to fight. Everybody is drilling over there, even the kiddies. But nobody wants a war, you understand."

"I see things are pretty unsettled in Greece."

"Yes, very chaotic, but . . ."

"But nobody wants war. What about Germany?"

"Germany is quite belligerent. You saw how she notified Spain she would stand for no nonsense. The Krupp factories have been working day and night equipping Germany with the most modern armaments. Her chemists and engineers are perfecting new and mighty instruments of war, but . . ."

"Nobody wants war."

"Precisely. All Europe is an armed camp; you see military preparations everywhere. Nearly every government breathes defiance. The goose step is back, but . . ."

"Nobody wants war."

"Quite so."

* * * *

"How is England taking things?"

"England is arming as never before. She is devoting every energy to getting ready for war . . ."

"What war?"

"Oh, I beg pardon. I thought I told you. The war nobody wants. And I wish you wouldn't interrupt me so much. It's most exasperating and I would punch you in the nose except for one thing."

"What's that?"

"Nobody wants war!"

What puzzles this department is not that Trotzky is still trying to start revolutions, but that he is so far behind the times that he doesn't know they're using self-starters.

A policeman who saved $74,000 in a few years has been fired from the New York police force. Anybody knows that the police business isn't that good.

"King Edward's Yacht Hits Bridge."—headline. Maybe it was those cocktails.

It is now possible for a New York court to give a reckless auto driver 30 days in jail for a first offense and six months for a third offense within a year and a half. What will delay things in New York City is that violating all the speed laws in congested streets doesn't count.

What's the Latest News on the 'Shift' Vote?

As the 1936 Presidential Campaign Swings Into Its Final Two Months, Are the "Shifters" Settling Down . . . or Are They Still Changing From Democrats to Republicans . . . from Republicans to Democrats?

First Poll

The first AMERICA SPEAKS Landon-Roosevelt poll, reported in July, indicated that if the election were held at the time the poll was taken, Gov. Landon would receive 272 electoral votes to President Roosevelt's 259 . . . giving the Kansan the victory.

Second Poll

The second poll, reported August 9, showed Montana, Colorado and West Virginia slipping out of the G. O. P. column with 18 electoral votes . . . while Wyoming and Montana, with 22 electoral votes, shifted to the Republican side, giving Gov. Landon a 276 to 255 electoral vote advantage.

Third Poll

But the third poll, reported August 23, showed another picture. Michigan swung to the Democrats with its 19 electoral votes, and President Roosevelt took the electoral lead, 274 to 255. Now . . . how will the "shifters" affect the results of the fourth Nationwide AMERICA SPEAKS poll?

Police Baffled As Chief Muir Clew Explodes

Hairs Clutched by Slain Y. W. Worker Found to Be Her Own.

By the Associated Press.

La Jolla, Calif., Sept. 3.—The Ruth Muir lust slaying investigation hit another snag tonight when it was announced tests disclosed that hair found clutched in the middle-aged social worker's hand was from her own head.

Detective Capt. Harry Kelly said Prof. C. D. Laudermilk, of Pomona, research chemist, had advised that scientific examination showed the strands of hair came from Miss Muir's head and not from the assailant the police theorized attacked and beat the Wellesley College graduate to death.

The development removed another possible clew in identifying the killer and left the case as mysterious as when hte Riverside Calif.) Y. W. C. A. secretary's body was found Tuesday morning on the beachfront.

A man wearing women's clothing was arrested in Los Angeles today and questioned concerning his whereabouts Monday night.

Police Capt. L. L. Curtis said the man first said he was Jack Birge, 31, former Marine, who had just arrived from San Diego. A little later, the officer said, he gave the name of Joe B. Smith and said he was born in Oakland, Calif., and had lived in Los Angeles for 15 years.

Officers said he wore a pink skirt and blouse and a brown wig and had used lipstick and rouge.

Hair from the wig was sent to Pomona College for comparison with hair found clutched in Miss Muir's hand.

Detective Lieuts. C. A. Gillen and Ralph Davis said he told conflicting stories concerning where he was when Miss Muir was killed.

He was arrested after the police received a telephone call that some one was annoying women on the street.

Ciriaci, Catholic Leader, Expires

Vatican City, Sept. 3 (AP).—Augusto Ciriaci, 47, president of the Italian Catholic Action organization which embroiled church and state in bitter conflict in 1931, died today.

Pope Pius sent his final benediction and celebrated special mass immediately after Ciriaci's death.

Twenty thousand of the Catholic Action clubs were closed in 1931 by Fascists who charged the organization with engaging in politics and competing with the Fascist corporative state.

When Fascists broke into the Rome headquarters of the organization, they threw the Pope's portrait out a window.

The issue was settled amicably in September, 1931, by a solemn promise from the Vatican to keep the Catholic Action clubs out of politics.

U. S. Seeks to End Minneapolis Strike

Minneapolis, Sept. 3 (AP).—Quiet prevailed on all six local strike fronts today, giving rise to hope that efforts of Federal conciliators to end the walkouts might prove successful.

Two Government negotiators studied the major disputes—that of the General Truck Drivers Union, 544, which has hampered delivery of grocery supplies and caused a shortage of some staples at outlying stores, and that of the Flour, Feed, Cereal, Feed and Elevator Workers Union, which has brought the flour industry to a virtual standstill.

But all mills in the industry—one of the city's major enterprises—except one, continued closed or operating on a restricted basis.

where they never heard of Father Coughlin.

Coughlin interrupted:

"They are all newspaper stories to sell papers, bishop."

"It seems to me," Bishop Gallagher said, "that there must be big financial interests pushing this matter, trying to put Father Coughlin out. It's a newspaper hoax."

Coughlin Blames Press.

"The press," Coughlin said, "wants me to get off the air, but they want the freedom of the press for themselves."

"There is a power behind the press, pushing," Bishop Gallagher said. "There must be powerful financial interests behind it—big money."

"I start broadcasting a week from Saturday, bishop," Coughlin said.

"It is about time they had your side of the case," the bishop replied. "If there was no electioneering, you would hear little about it. It's all electioneering. I repeat that nothing has been done to restrain Father Coughlin."

Coughlin said he was quoting the Bible when he called Mr. Roosevelt a liar and cited the second chapter of the second verse of Revelations, which reads, in part: "And thou hast tried them which say they are apostles and are not and hast found them liars."

When the Rex reached its pier, there were 500 persons, most of them members of Coughlin's National Union of Social Justice, waiting to hail the bishop and the priest. Bishop Gallagher spoke to them:

"It is the voice of God that comes to your from this great orator of Royal Oak. Rally behind him."

Coughlin brought the day to a close by announcing at a late press conference that he had changed his broadcasts from Sunday to Saturday.

"I can't compete with baseball," he explained.

Palestine Trouble Halts War Game

London, Sept. 3 (AP).—Maneuvers for the first army division, scheduled to begin tomorrow at Sussex, were canceled suddenly tonight as the war office announced it was considering the question of reinforcements in troubled Palestine.

It was understood the Palestine trouble, aggravated by a prolonged Arab strike against Jewish immigration and by weeks of guerrilla warfare and sabotage, was discussed at yesterday's cabinet council.

Dispatches from Jerusalem today said a British flying officer, Thomas B. Hunter, and his gunner, E. G. Lincoln, had been killed in the crash of a military plane during one of the daily fights with Arab terrorists near Tulkarem.

Another pilot was shot in the leg but landed safely.

4 More Bodies Found in Mine; Death Toll Is 10

Shaft at Logan, W. Va., Is Ordered Closed to Await Inquiry.

By the Associated Press.

Logan, W. Va., Sept. 3.—From a little "room" piled almost ceiling high with jagged pieces of slate and lumps of coal came bodies of four men today, the last of ten who died as a gas explosion shattered part of the Macbeth mine.

The last four were found together in the center of the explosion area. They were killed by the shock of the blast. Six comrades died from gas fumes which swept through the workings.

One hundred and ten others in the operation of the Hutchinson Coal Co. escaped. But they immediately turned their efforts to rescue work.

The last four bodies taken out were those of Kack Adkins, 50; Gus Mounts, 33; Tom Miller, 25; Victor Corillo, 25.

Mine Is Closed.

With the appearance of the last body, J. F. White, State mine inspector, ordered the mine closed until Saturday when the State department will start an investigation of the cause.

Since morning, the workers bored more than 300 feet through the obstacles that shut off the trapped group from escape after the blast, apparently caused by gas, roared through the pit.

Outside 1,000 persons, among them wives and relatives of the miners, anxiously waited in a drizzling rain.

Mine 640 Feet Up.

The mine, owned by the Hutchinson Coal Co., is situated about eight miles from this mountain town.

The rescue crews, impeded by falling timbers and the danger of deadly fumes, moved inch-by-inch through the pit.

Two-by-two the dead were brought out. The first pair, Elisha Watts, 32, and Andy Gazdik, 60, were carried out shortly after the explosion. Then, after digging all night in the hope the others might be alive, the rescuers found the bodies of William Refett, 40, and Grover Saunders, 28.

An hour later they came upon the bodies of Edward Saunders, 40, and Julius McShane, 45, partly buried by debris.

Hysterical cries came from women in the crowd outside the entrance, which was roped off for an area of about 150 feet.

Shorts-Clad Fireman Attendance Winner

Undeterred when fellow firemen returned his practical jokes by hiding his clothes, Tilghman E. Price, of Hagerstown, Md., yesterday attended the final session of the State Fire College at the University of Maryland in his underwear.

He said he was trying to win his perfect attendance award.

Clad only in a pair of shorts, undershirt and shoes, Price sallied forth from Calvert Hall, crossed several hundred yards of campus and entered the main auditorium of the engineering building.

His appearance was greeted by a roar from the throats of several hundred firemen, many of whom had been victims of Price's own practical jokes during the three-day college. Presiding Officer Sherwood Brockwell brought him to the front.

Said Brockwell, when he could be heard:

"All laughs that men get are paid for by the embarrassment of others."

There were shouts of "give him his clothes." They were produced and Price dressed. He received the attendance award.

Former Crown Prince Loses in Alimony Suit

New York, Sept. 3 (AP).—Alfonso de Bourbon, former Crown Prince of Spain, was ordered by Supreme Court Justice Aron Steuer today to pay his wife, the former Edelmira Sampedro, of Havana, temporary alimony of $250 monthly and $750 counsel fees.

The award was made pending outcome of the prince's suit for annulment of the marriage. The prince is in a hospital suffering from hemophilia. The wife had asked for $250 a week and $25,000 counsel fees, claiming the latter sum would be necessary for the expenses she said would be involved in an investigation of the basis of her husband's complaint.

Chesterfield Wins

. . . for uniformity

Why does every Chesterfield have the same taste . . . the same pleasing flavor and mildness.

Because we draw on not just one year's tobacco crop but crops of several different years to make sure that Chesterfield's quality never varies.

Every Chesterfield tastes just like every other Chesterfield—mild, not strong; always with a pleasing taste and aroma.

Chesterfields win because they're always the same . . .

AAA Holds Rise In Pay Offsets High Food Cost

Price Index Near '29 Peak; Purchasing Power Is Declared Greater.

Sharp advances in retail food costs that have carried the price index to within 20 points of the 1929 high have been largely offset by improvements in consumer purchasing power, the AAA claimed yesterday in a special price study.

"The effect of the drought has been to bring food prices more closely in line with the average of other living costs," L. H. Bean, AAA economic adviser, asserted. "Employed consumers can still buy more food with their present earnings than they were able to buy in 1928 or 1929."

He said comparable data for the unemployed and those on relief were not available.

Sharp Advance.

"While it has not known how much higher food prices may be in the first half of 1937 as contrasted with the first half of 1936," Bean said, "it may be pointed out that present food prices have already advanced about half as much over the prices during the first half of 1936 as they advanced during the 1934-35 season.

"In other words, a substantial part of the effect of the drought on food prices probably already has been witnessed."

Meanwhile, for the first week in recent months, the wholesale farm and food price indexes of the Department of Labor turned downward last week, but still were higher than a month ago. The farm product index was carried lower by 1.5 per cent, due to decreases of 2.9 per cent for grains and 2 per cent for livestock and poultry. Average wholesale prices for foods declined only 0.4 per cent.

Fell to 59 in 1933.

The AAA study showed that the index of retail food prices, which stood on an average at 102 in 1929, had fallen to 66 in 1932, and to 59 by March, 1933. Between the first half of 1934 and the first half of 1935, food prices advanced 10.8, the AAA study showed. By July, 1936, the index had worked its way up to 88.

Bean claimed that an advance of about 50 per cent in earnings per employed factory worker during the last three years "has enabled workers to pay higher food prices to compensate farmers in part for their crop failures."

He said the ability of the average factory worker to buy his usual quantity of foods is still greater than it was in 1928. From the low of 69 per cent of 1929 earnings, in 1932, Bean said earnings in a broad list of industries had climbed by July, 1936, to about 85 per cent of their 1929 earnings.

Greater Purchasing Power.

"This gives them a purchasing power for food about 6 per cent greater than in 1929, an advantage not quite so great as at the bottom of the depression when food prices had fallen relatively lower than the average earnings of those then employed," Bean said.

Living costs other than food reached an index low of 82 per cent of 1928 levels in March, 1933, and since that time have advanced only to 83.

Attributing recent food price increases to the drought, Bean said:

"The effect of the 1936 drought has affected fruit and vegetable production, as well as feed crops, and consequently this has been reflected in higher prices of dairy products, fruits and vegetables, and it is generally expected that higher meat prices will prevail during early 1937 than at present.

May Be Offset.

"But just as the higher meat prices in 1935, following the 1934 drought, were in a large measure offset by lower prices of other products (the production of which was greater in 1935 than in 1934), so the higher prices of meats in 1937 may be, in part, offset by increased production and lower prices of crops which, if normal weather conditions return, will be more abundant in 1937 than at present."

The Federal Trade Commission disclosed yesterday it would report on October 1 its recommendations and conclusions after an investigation of agricultural income ordered by Congressional resolution. The study covers cattle, calves, hogs, wheat, milk, tobacco and cotton, but is based on information collected largely before the drought. A further study of the share of the consumer's dollar received by the farmer from fruits and vegetables is proceeding on a restricted basis, because of the failure of Congress to provide funds, it was said.

Here Comes the Master of the Sounds!

To be sure that the sound reproduction will be all that the distinguished performances of the principals deserve, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Loew's, Inc., have dispatched their foremost technicians to the National Capital against the coming of "Romeo and Juliet" to the National Theater on Sunday night. Here we have Douglas Shearer, brother of Norma, who plays the leading role in the film version of the Shakespeare classic, and who, on his own account, is one of the foremost technicians of the industry, being greeted at the Washington Airport yesterday afternoon, by Gene Ford, manager of Loew's Capitol Theater. In the middle is Lester Isaacs, former Washingtonian, one of Mr. Shearer's assistants.

Power Meeting To Hear Appeal For Water Plan

TVA Chief Urges Program to Develop Nation's Hydro Resources.

By Sidney Olson.

The Constitution now bars the Federal Government from meeting many national and regional problems, and should be either amended or interpreted to allow the Government to aid in the solution of such conditions, Arthur E. Morgan, chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, said yesterday.

In a paper prepared for the forthcoming World Power Conference, to begin in Washington Monday, Morgan urged that steps be taken to "solve these difficulties."

Other means to secure what Dr. Morgan calls "the most pressing need in America — comprehensive legislation, both Federal and State, for the unified development of water resources," would include the organization of interstate water control districts, or the formation of compacts between the States.

While Morgan pointed to the TVA as an example of good practice in planned water utilization, and said that it is possible to extend this type of planning to other great water systems in America, Harrison G. Roby, of the Byllesby Engineering and Management Corporation, condemned the TVA in another paper prepared for the conference.

Outlines Plan.

In his indictment of the New Deal's vast power project, Roby outlined a plan for the utilization of water sources, stating that this function should be left to private initiative, operating under Government supervision.

He said that "no responsible private groups" advocate exploitation of water resources without regard for the public good. He classed as "unbearable" any offhand improvisation of a water resources policy by the Government, if made without "regard to economic soundness or past experience."

Roby, stipulating hydro power as most effective when interconnected in a large system that also obtains power from steam stations, said that until recently there had been little effort to co-ordinate water control projects with the development of power because it has not been economical. In this connection he pointed out that only one of the 52 navigation dams on the Ohio River and none of the dams on the Mississippi River has provision for power generation.

Roby assailed the TVA project on the basis that it has cost "four times as much" there to build dams to generate power as it would have cost to build navigation dams only.

He noted that in building dams for flood control the land covered by dammed water often exceeds in value that which would have been covered during a flood, adding that in the Tennessee Valley more than twice as much land will be inundated as was ever covered in the region's greatest flood.

In two papers to be read in section 5 of the conference Basil Manly, vice chairman of the Federal Power Commission, and George M. Tidd, president of the American Gas & Electric Co., differed sharply as to the role of the Government in co-ordinating electric utilities.

Manly noted in his study that experience has demonstrated that interconnection and co-ordination of power facilities enables utilities to meet increased demand and at the same time to lower the cost of energy. He suggested the establishment in the country of vast interconnected regional systems to pool all the power in that area.

Manly recommended that large blocks of power shortly to be generated by Government projects be thrown into these pools, thus avoiding costly duplication of transmission and distribution equipment.

Tidd, on the other hand, fearful of Government efforts to force consolidation of utility systems under provisions of the 1935 holding company act, demanded a "hands off" Government policy.

Scoffing at the theory that any paper system can be worked out to unite the utility networks of the country, Tidd held in his paper that the industry itself already has worked out the best possible system —the one now in use. Todd declared that no conditions in this country warrant the establishment of power network of the kind contemplated by Government experts.

Thought Begins Before Birth, Psychologists' Parley Is Told

By the Associated Press.

Hanover, N. H., Sept. 3.—A proof that both thinking and feeling begin before birth was offered today to members of the American Psychological Association by two University of Rochester scientists.

By means of extremely delicate measurements on guinea pigs in the fetal, or unborn, stage of development they found clear evidence of brain activity 12 days before birth.

Dr. Charles S. Bridgman used the now-familiar method of inserting silver electrodes into the brain and measuring the electrical waves set up. With this method, changes between quiet brain activity and stimulated activity can be recorded as differences in wave formation.

Using guinea pigs from early in the fetal stage in which blood circulation was artificially maintained, and later fetuses in which air breathing was started, he found "characteristic brain waves" at least 12 days before normal "birth time," and, he added, "there are also some indications of earlier brain potentials."

Dr. Leonard Carmichael reported he had found a progressive sensitivity to pain of guinea pigs throughout the fetal period.

He tested their sense of feeling by subjecting animals of progressive fetal age to drops of salt solution, ranging in temperature from 32 degrees Fahrenheit to 168 degrees Fahrenheit, applied to the nose, ear and paws.

"Sensitivity to temperature," as judged by response, increased through the fetal period," Dr. Carmichael said, "and responses released by temperature stimulations are more 'specific' or reflex-like in the early period than in later periods."

Mattingly Scores Law, Frees Vendors

Three street vendors were released in Police Court yesterday as Judge Robert E. Mattingly attacked the District regulation prohibiting licensed peddlers from stopping longer than necessary in one place to make a sale.

Although the vendors pleaded guilty to the charges, Judge Mattingly dismissed them with the remark:

"Police could better spend their time catching burglars and robbers than arresting men who pay a license fee to sell on the street. That regulation has no place on the statute books."

The three men, arrested by Policeman Roy Kesselring, of the Third Precinct, gave names of Othesefs Geovanis, Nick Laksis and Nick Kalikas.

Sheriff W. G. Chandler kept his posse on the lookout for the brothers in the area adjacent to the Oregon line. He also announced he has asked Gov. Frank F. Merriam to authorize a State reward.

Dr. Lapp Gives Views on New U.S. Labor Post

Official of PWA Outlines Plans for Settling Union Disputes.

Dr. Jonh A. Lapp, PWA director of labor relations, who Wednesday was appointed national referee for jurisdictional disputes in the building trades, yesterday outlined his plan for settling controversies.

"I have accepted the position of referee for the building trades unions because I believe that a great service can be rendered to labor," he declared, "to the employers and to the community in bringing about the settlement of jurisdictional disputes on the basis of fair play and justice to all.

"My decisions will be based upon the most thorough-going hearings of the cases which come before me. There will be no snap judgments in any case and I shall expect the unions involved to be most thorough in the presentation of their claims. Only after full hearings and the study of briefs will a decision be made in any case.

"According to the agreement of the unions no case will be opened which has already been settled by union agreements or by proper jurisdictional award.

"It is my conception that agreements between international unions are better than arbitrational awards and it will be my hope and expectation that such agreements will be concluded on a wider range of jurisdictional disputes."

Screen Star Is Curious About Genteel Rating

Miss Landi Has Own Ideas About Social Strata, if Any Exists.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Sept. 3.—Elissa Landi, slight, red-haired actress, has a grudge against Emily Post, and is anxious to get it off her chest.

"I'm not refined, and I'm glad of it," broodsides Landi. "I hate refinement, and genteel people give me a pain. Do you know what I mean by 'genteel people?'—the kind that eat grapes with a knife and fork. They make me tired."

Landi came out flatfooted in favor of the undershirt-socks-and-suspenders in the drawing-room school of behavior favored by popular politicians and rugged individualists.

"I like people who have risen from the gutter," she declaimed. "It's a swell place to come from. But I've no use for those who climbed out on the shoulders of others. They're the kind who eventually turn 'genteel.'

"Yes, and I have no use for appendages—the wives, sisters and brothers who sat back and watched, or just tagged along while someone else did the climbing. They usually go 'genteel,' too."

Loquacious Landi may be "unrefined" as all get out, but she can't very well claim to have sprung from the gutter in ten easy hops. She was born in Venice, Italy, where there are no gutters.

Kipling Clicks.

The late Rudyard Kipling is Hollywood's latest vogue, with one picture based on his works about to begin and another coming shortly.

Metro is about to start shooting "Captains Courageous," with Lionel Barrymore as Disko Troupe, the Gloucester fisherman, and Freddie Bartholomew as the unlicked son of a millionaire rescued from the ocean.

RKO has retained Howard Hawks, who left "Come and Get It" two-thirds finished because he didn't see eye to eye with Sam Goldwyn, to direct a picture based on "Gunga Din." RKO scripters say they have hacked a movie plot out of the verse, and if so they are better men than most of 'em, Gunga Din.

About The Showshops

THE Warner Brothers' film version of Hervey Allen's outsize novel of "Anthony Adverse" has been breaking attendance records in all of the cities in which it has been shown—Los Angeles, Atlantic City and other way stations of considerable importance.

BELL.

The reason was made clear to the local drayma desks on Wednesday evening at the Congressional Country Club, when the celluloid rendition of the monumental work of fiction was unspooled for the first time in the Capital, barring, of course, the private peek at the picture which convinced the Warner executives in Washington that they had something that would stand up under close scrutiny.

"Anthony Adverse" is a picture that will inspire no end of controversy. To the readers of the book—and I assume that there are those who have wangled their way through the full 1,224 pages of the original work—it will be a not too faithful transcription of the events that Mr. Allen set down on the printed page. About midway of its length, the film goes entirely berserk as far as any rigid adherence to the novel is concerned. It does not, however, ever desert the notion that the screen is intended as a medium of exciting entertainment.

On the other hand, the gelatin edition of the fabulous fiction contrived by Mr. Allen asserts a new claim of the cinema upon public attention. It has the courage to defy the published work and advance its own notion of what Anthony Adverse might better have done to bring his personal history to a colorful conclusion.

The African sequences are relied upon principally to produce this contrasting effect. There might have been an appreciable eventuation of this sort of contrapoint had the trend of the novel been adhered to—but it wasn't. And there occurs the basis of the quarrel between the realists and the idealists. Anthony is made the victim of a dual sort of perfidy. But this is all aside from the intrinsic merit of the picture.

"Anthony Adverse" is a superlative example of the swashbuckling, duelling, flamboyant sort of film that enlists its proponents from all strata of society. It cannot miss at the boxoffice. It is a vehicle for the dissemination of those qualities which time and again have been proved to be impervious to professional criticism.

Fredric March in the title role acquits himself with full credit. The same may be said for Olivia de Havilland, who presents a study of youthful impetuosity that lends the picture much of its spirited movement.

But to me the principal claim to greatness that "Anthony Adverse" is able to exert lies in the lively movement of its celluloid plot. There is no pause, no bog, no recession from exciting action in any of the diverse ramifications of the story.

"Anthony Adverse," regardless of the opinion of the library reading table, is one of the outstanding pictures of the year. Why it ever was omitted from the roster of 1936-37 road-show attractions, I never shall know.

The one word of advice would be, "See it."

• • • •

Among the more important observations to be made in connection with the film performance of "Anthony Adverse" should be a word of commendation for some of the character impersonations revealed during the action of the picture. Fredric March is an almost ideal Anthony. Olivia de Havilland has the inestimable advantage in several sequences of looking almost exactly like Billie Dove. There are many more who aid in making "Anthony Adverse" one of the pictures to be seen. Not the least of these is the impersonation of Don Luis by Claude Rains.

I have not yet been able to determine why Mr. Rains has not been made the star of "The Good Earth." He played the part of Wang Lun in the original stage production of the Pearl S. Buck fiction when it was produced by the Theater Guild as a stage play at the National.

There is still waste in Hollywood.

• • • •

The new note in screen previews established by the Warner Brothers interests Wednesday at the Congressional Country Club bids fair to travel far. I mean to say that the idea of remote control is catching on. Out at Congressional we encountered a meek little man by the name of Grum, who has a dude ranch, or something of the sort out in Idaho. The screening of "Anthony Adverse" having gone off with such aplomb, it was his suggestion, and one to which we of the critical fraternity all agreed, that the next advance squint at a picture of importance be staged out on his farm in the Far West. I don't think anything will come of this, but it is a grand idea.

• • • •

Yesterday afternoon at 3:45 by the clock there flew into Washington a gentleman who knows more about sound reproduction for the screen than any other two men living. His name is Douglas Shearer and he is a brother of the famed Norma, who will be seen at the National beginning Sunday night in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet." Douglas Shearer's name has been seen on a tremendous number of main titles during the years, but this, to the best of my knowledge and belief is the first time this particular expert has come to town. He has a new trick up his sleeve this time, which his accomplice, Lester Isaacs, former Washingtonian, describes to me as "steriophonic sound reproduction." You can figure that one out for yourself. That is what I am trying to do some hours after the Shearer landing.

Actor, Tripped, Hurt In Plunge of 20 Feet

Hollywood, Sept. 3 (AP).—Ray Finney, 36, a stage and screen player, was seriously injured today when he tripped during a movie scene and fell 20 feet to the floor of a stage. Dr. Geoffrey Grace, studio physician, said a steel trench helmet Finney was wearing averted injuries that might have been fatal.

Finney was playing a British soldier in a film centered around street battles of the Irish rebellion. He was to leap from the roof of a building to the street. Instead, said studio attendants, he tripped over his rifle and plunged head first to the stage.

Annual Tacky Ball to Be Among First Events on Calendar.

Miss Gertrude Pearson in List of Those Who Will Make Bows.

By Marylyn Reeve.

With debut plans fast filling up the calendar, society sits back just a bit bewildered to see summer thus hurried along and autumn really here.

One of the first large parties to gather in the members of the younger set and start them off to a year of rollicking good times, and also to call home the vacation "stayer-on-ers," is the annual Tacky Ball which is given at the Mayflower.

Mrs. William Laird Dunlop has not yet announced the date for this year, but it will take place when the fields proclaim the harvest with bundles of corn, circled by golden pumpkins.

Among the young Capitalites who will make their bows to society is Miss Gertrude Pearson, winsome young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Pearson, who has even selected the date. Like her sister, Miss Katherine Pearson, who was a debutante a season or two ago, she will be presented at a large tea to be given in her parents' Wyoming avenue home Thanksgiving afternoon.

Miss Pearson, who is a graduate of the Mount Vernon Seminary, is tall and vivacious, with brown hair and blue-gray eyes. She is a witty young person and indulges in the cleverest puns.

The Pearsons are now at their delightful summer home at Bay Head, N. J. From the beginning of the season, when school is out and books are cast aside, this large home overlooking the ocean is filled with guests, and over the week-ends more (if possible) arrive to fill in any space which may be left.

The family is planning to remain at the seashore until the end of this month, when they will return to Washington for Miss Edith and young Master William to re-enter school, while their elders again take their places in the gay whirl.

Miss Ruth Dove, pretty daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dove, who is making two debuts this year, one here and the other in Baltimore, will be the guest of honor at the huge ball her parents will give on December 29 at the Carlton Hotel. Her bow in the Maryland city will be at the First German on December 7.

By Poe Sisters.

Washingtonians at the Olympic games greeted Princess Christian of Hesse, a belle of this city in the days when she was Miss Elizabeth Reid Rogers. She was presented to society here by her mother, Mrs. Reid Rogers, at their lovely home near the site of the old British Embassy.

This American princess is a finished linguist and a favorite at diplomatic dinners and can chat with European celebrities in their own tongues. She also is regarded as one of the best-dressed American women in European society.

Princess Christian attended most of the Olympic events and was enthusiastic in her applause for the American winners.

Labor cares are put behind her by Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins when she retires to her charming Georgetown residence after the day's work. There Secretary Perkins is far more interested in a new combination of petunias for a garden plot or a new dish with which to surprise awaited guests than in problems she has left behind her in her big office in the Department of Labor.

Leave Desks Behind.

Secretary Perkins is not unique among the women executives of the department in this regard, however.

Built under their personal inspection and suggestions is the lovely colonial house, occupied by Dr. Martha Eliot, assistant chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, and Dr. Ethel Dunham, director of research of the same bureau, on Reservoir road. Old colonial furniture the result of many little journeys into nearby Virginia and Maryland enrich its atmosphere and the walls are covered with landscapes painted by Dr. Dunham, and charming portraits of Indian children she has made on trips to the Southwest.

From Law to Posies.

The first thing Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt did when she was appointed Assistant Attorney General was to procure a home in Georgetown for herself and her adopted daughter. There she has a lovely garden in which she works many hours when the cares of her law practice are put aside. As is well known, she was in charge of the prohibition enforcement unit while in the Department of Justice. So some of her neighbors in Georgetown amused themselves by parking all their empty liquor bottles in Mrs. Willebrandt's backyard. She only laughed at their jokes, however, and the practice soon stopped.

Mis Katherine Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau, who lives in the same apartment building with her parents, Judge and Mrs. Irvin L. Lenroot, has an apartment of her own, where her friends enjoy her real gift for hospitality. From her summer pilgrimages to her old home in northern Wisconsin, she comes laden with the good things of the region to share among her friends here.

Two women big game hunters who appeared in recent news stories are well known in Washington. They are Mrs. Ernest Thompson-Seton, once national president of the League of American Pen Women and a temporary resident of Washington, and Mrs. Armand Denis, formerly Miss Leila Roosevelt, second cousin of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, and, of course, a great-niece of t hat great game hunter, the late President Theodore Roosevelt.

Mrs. Denis recently arrived in this country with her husband after a year and a half in the Belgian Congo. Washingtonians who know this energetic woman still smile at a story told of her. When her husband refused to take her with him on an expedition on which he went with Frank Buck some years ago, nothing daunted, she secured a truck and a woman companion and set out to beat his record. The next time her husband went on an expedition he took her along.

Mary R. Joyce Becomes Bride

Wed to N. P. Wigginton in Rectory of Sacred Heart Church.

The rectory of the Shrine of the Sacred Heart Church was the scene of the wedding yesterday of Miss Mary Rose Joyce, daughter of Mrs. Julia Joyce and the late John F. Joyce, to Mr. Norval Phillip Wigginton, son of Mr. James Norval Wigginton and the late Mrs. Wigginton. The ceremony was performed at 6 o'clock in the evening by the Rev. Michael Hyle.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. Thomas Joyce. She wore a gown of white satin with a lace tunic and a lace hat, and carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Her matron of honor and only attendant was her sister, Mrs. Charles McAleny. She wore a frock of blue mousseline de soie with a hat and accessories to match and carried talisman roses and delphinium.

Mr. James Aubrey Hayden was best man. A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed the church ceremony.

After a honeymoon through the New England States, Mr. and Mrs. Wigginton will reside at 200 Rhode Island avenue.

Mr. Hayes M. Rodgens and his sister, Miss Margaret Rodgens, of Canton, Ohio, are at the Martinique for a stay of a few days.

A Woman's NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Sept. 3.

ALICE HUGHES.

THE EARTH must be gradually inching nearer the sun, or something, for the past summer certainly has been the goofiest in history as far as "question games" are concerned. Maybe the first frost will help the game - martyrs as well as the hay-fever victims.

A zany announces, "I'm in a new business," and another eager player asks, "What business?" "The tree business," says the first zany, already beginning to chortle. "How're you doing?" asks his fellow-conspirator, "Oak," replies the zany, and everyone within earshot simply dies. This, of course, can go on for hours unless someone takes a firm line.

I'm not exposing this new insanity in order that you play it, of course. It is merely a warning, so that when some giggler comes up and tells you he's in a new business you can say, "Well, good luck, kiddo," and walk away.

The bangtails have finished running around and around at Saratoga, and the usual grist of gossip tidbits is being brought back from the Spa. One concerns the misadventures of La Belle Sheila Barrett, who came up from Washington nearly ten years ago to struggle with Broadway, and finally clicked as a clever mimic in the best night clubs here and in London. The Barrett quickly learned about Saratoga, where the Whitneys speak only to Vanderbilts, and Vanderbilts speak only to their horses.

• • • •

Big Sheila was hired to entertain for two weeks at Arrowhead, swankiest of the Spa's night spots and gambling casinos, with an option for another fortnight. On her very first night, when the place was alive with Whitneys and Vanderbilts and Wideners, La Barrett had to go and sing one of her snippy songs poking mean fun at the smart horsey set. Right in the middle of it Mrs. Jock Whitney, wife of the millionaire poloist, stable owner and movie backer, got up and stomped out of the place in a very high dudgeon. Sheila served her two weeks, but the option was dropped like a hot spud.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Politics is a family affair in our neighborhood this fall, with Dorothy Frooks, of Westchester, and her brother, S. Leighton Frooks, of Queens, both seeking Republican nominations for Congressmen-at-large. Both are lawyers, and each wishes the other lots of luck—and probably adds, sotto voice, "You rascal, you!"

The best grub in this town is not to be found in the well-publicized spots famous for their altitude or their girl shows, but in more modest side-street places that have a steady clientele of gourmets. There's no nekkid ladies, but the food—oh boy! . . .

The unhappy Astor mess still echoes in the press. Some noble soul signing herself "H. P." writes thus to the editor: "I hereby pledge myself to see every moving picture in which Mary Astor has a part. Hers is the mother love this country needs!" Gallantly spoken, Mrs. Patrick Henry!

Fall Shoes Are Steadily Soaring Upward; Their Snug, Glove-Like Fit Tapers the Ankle

A perfect frock to wear with the new high shoes is the hand-woven Irish tweed above, with full, swirling skirt and snug bodice. It was designed by Elizabeth Hawes. Note the initials on the cashmere gloves in lieu of stitching. At right is High-Boy, the new high and ankle-slenderizing shoe.

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

NOT to be overshadowed by the popular high hats, shoes, too, are soaring upward. Starting at the beginning of the season, with the fore part of the shoe only gaining height, they are now appearing in boot styles, high all the way around the ankle. These sturdy new high shoes, inspired by the heavier and clumsier ski-boot, are given a glove-like fit, which actually tapers the angle. Besides being high fashion for all daytime wear, they are extremely sensible. For rainfall, football and snowfall they are not only cozy and warm, but eliminate the wearing of rubbers and galoshes.

Smart stitching and brass eyelets add a dash and smart contrast to such alluring costume colors as forest green, rust, brown, wine and black—the boots are usually fashioned of soft bucko. Emulating officers' boots are the versions made of shiny tan calf; grand accompaniments to the sturdier tweeds. That high shoes are really style news is noted in a recent survey conducted among college girls—65 per cent preferred the ankle-high bootie.

Etiquette of the Call

WHEN HE comes to call, does the evening bristle with dismaying little problems of etiquette? Or do you feel sure of yourself?

Put him at his ease by meeting him at the door. Certainly this is correct! If he looks helplessly around for a place to park his hat, take it from him. He will not remove his coat, even on a warm evening, unless you suggest it—if he is well bred. If he does don't act surprised but dispose of it.

If it is his first call, you will of course introduce him to the family. "Mother, this is Hal Jones," you say, not the other way around. If sister is just a slip of a girl, under 18, introduce her to Hal as "My sister Alice." If she is 18 or more, then say "Alice, this is Hal Jones." If she is married, say "Mrs. Hastings, Hal Jones," and explain to Hal that she is your sister. Introduce your young brother as "My brother Tom."

If your caller suggests going out to a movie or some other informal entertainment and asks "Where shall we go?" specify your choice. Men don't seem to like it if you pass the ball right back with "Oh, anywhere you'd like to go."

When you're sure of your etiquette, social occasions are a joy. Our 40-page booklet, ETIQUETTE FOR EVERY DAY, clears up bothering little problems. Who goes first down a theater aisle, into a restaurant? When in the public spotlight, know the rules!

Send 15c for our booklet, Etiquette for Every Day, to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West 19th street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Fathers Should Have Part In Training Young Children

Should Not Be Pushed Into Background by Mothers or Teachers; Girl Particularly Needs Male Parental Advice.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

Mr. Jones took an active interest in his children from the time they were born. The tiniest baby's earliest conscious memory was of bedtime romps with Daddy, and, as time went on, of walks and stories and games, in which Daddy figured as largely as mother.

To be sure, mother was nearly always about, and Daddy only occasionally, but life was that way. Asked to choose between their parents, the children would have found the decision impossible to make.

This dual background is of great importance in the life of every child. Children need the broadening contact and point of view of both parents if they are to have a fully rounded upbringing. Father and mother do not approach life from the same angle, and the child is the compound of both strains. Often the father can understand and handle a situation or a child better than the mother can, and the mother will be of most value with a quite different set of problems.

Girls need their fathers to give them their first insight into the workings of masculine psychology; boys need them to teach them the masculine approach to life. A woman, however broadminded and worldly wise she may be, cannot give her children the whole picture any more than a man can.

It is unfortunate that owing to the preponderance of women teachers in the schools, so much of the training and education of the young must be in the hands of women. Only in the complete home, where father and mother together bring up the children, can the real experience of life be taught. It takes two parents to bring up a child quite as much as to produce one.

Autumn Headgear Trend Distinctly To the More Gay

New York, July 31.—Fall hats are on the up and up.

Whether inspired by the country's newly found prosperity or by the Directoire influence, designers this season have draped and blocked with an eye turned skyward.

Where crowns fail to achieve the skyscraper lines, trimmings give the new autumn headgear a lift toward chic.

Feathers, quills, cockades of grosgrain and lacquered ribbon, whole birds with wings outspread and shining metal fancies all perch on the tops of the newest hats to give them a jauntiness and dashing gayety.

There are smart cuffed turbans with two or three bright quills thrust into their softly draped crowns. There are several new beret-type hats, with the new forward, sharp front silhouette.

Square crowned felt, others with pinched crowns, and still others with crowns ending in points at both front and back are all in the front row of the millinery parade for tailored ensembles.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Bacteria in the Heart.

When bacteria find their way into the water mains of a city—or into its milk supply—disease is likely to follow. The nature of the epidemic will depend upon the type of the invading organisms. If their source is stopped new cases will cease to appear. Fortunately, we have means of protecting both water and milk; the former by adding chlorine at the pumps and the latter by pasteurization.

But the situation is quite different when microbes flourish in the blood, for we cannot sterilize that vital fluid. In the presence of an infection, some bacteria filter into the circulation. But they do not remain there long. Fighting forces that kill and destroy these microscopic enemies of life become active, and when recovery takes place we know that the disease has capitulated—that the skulking hordes of those hostile to health have been killed.

But once in a while nests of streptococci or other organisms will be able to establish themselves where they can live contentedly. Now and then the tip of the root of a tooth or a pocket in a nasal sinus will protect them for a time, but sooner or later they will be ferreted out and removed.

Lassitude Symptom.

The chief danger spot to human life is the lining of the heart (endocardium). This location is favorable for the rapid reproduction of bacteria and unfavorable for healing, although recovery does occur in a few instances. Tiny colonies may may hide beneath the thin heart lining where they cannot be reached effectively by the germ-destroying properties of the blood, nor by the intiseptic circulating in it. Miniature volcanoes thus discharge microbes into circulation.

The disease is known as chronic or subacute bacterial endocarditis. At its onset the patient will exhibit no symptoms that can be traced to the heart. Lassitude may be increasingly evident, however, and sooner or later the temperature will rise, with the high point at about 102 degrees Fahrenheit. Occasionally the fever will drop to normal and remain there for many hours—even two or three days—only to resume its up-and-down character. Minute skin hemorrhage appears and not infrequently a blood vessel in the spleen, a kidney, or the lungs may become plugged.

There is at present no possibility that the surgeon can reach the seat of the infection. Therefore, the only method of attack, besides raising resistance to the level where the disease can be overcome, is the use of radium and and X-ray, which has been advocated recently.

Lord Horder reports one case in which X-ray apparently brought about recovery. In illustrating the use of radium he tells of a young woman who gave all the clinical signs of bacterial endocarditis with severe anemia. Streptococci were found in the blood. She was treated with a radium bomb at four different sessions. The fever subsided, the blood cells returned to normal, and the patient left the hospital after an illness which had continued for five and one-half months.

He refers to an additional case—that of a young woman whose heart became infected following the extraction of a diseased tooth. She received numerous blood transfusions from her husband, who had been inoculated with large doses of streptococci vaccine made from organisms recovered from the patient's blood. Despite the strikingly favorable outcome in this instance, Horder favors the use of X-ray or radium directed to the infected area as accurately as possible.

Throat Infections.

Of course, prevention is of the greatest importance. This means at all times careful attention to the hygiene of the mouth, nose and throat in well individuals, the procedure scrupulously enforced with those who are known to have heart valve defects. It is believed that slight sepsis in the tonsils and teeth that might be disregarded in normal individuals should be removed thoroughly in all who are known to possess damaged hearts. In fact, the plan applies to collections of pus wherever they may exist.

Again, it must be emphasized that fatigue (lowered resistance) paves the way for chronic illness. Too often the occupation is resumed long before the forces of heaing have restored the power of the body. This applies particularly to such acute infections as tonsillitis, quinsy sore throat and influenza.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Should Girl of 20 Forget Older Man She Has Loved Without Encouragement for Four Years?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl of 20. I have been seriously interested in an older man since I was 16. I have had many dates with him during the past four years. I enjoy being with him more than anyone else. He tells me that I should have no serious ideas about him as I am too young for him. Even as he says things like that his actions seem to indicate that he is deeply fond of me.

• • • •

Once, when he was told that I was in love with him, he took occasion to tell me the next time we were together that he had better not see me any more if I was getting serious. We agreed to go together on friendly terms after that. Although I agreed to the arrangement, I cannot think of him as just a friend. He continuously comes to see me and I cannot help but think he likes me more than he cares to admit.

• • • •

Please tell me if I should go on loving him secretly. Do you think he has been calling on me for four years for nothing? He is refined, educated and has a good position. He is the only person I have ever loved, although I have been out with many others. If he learns that I am still thinking seriously of him I am afraid he won't come back again. I hope you can tell me whether to go on loving him or try to forget. Sincerely yours, ANXIOUS.

• • • •

DEAR ANXIOUS: Try to forget the man. He has said he doesn't want your love; perhaps not in so many words, but in words which boil down to that. So take his statement at face value. If it should indeed be true that he cares for you more than he realizes or has chosen to admit, an attitude of thoroughgoing indifference to him, or better yet, of lively interest in someone else, may bring him to his senses and, figuratively speaking, to his knees. M. H.

A Family Squabble.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am writing in regard to a brother of mine. He is 33 years of age and for five years has been seeing a young lady who is 26. None of us, including my mother, likes her. She is an odd type. So different from us. He has told mother he is going to marry her in December. This will break my mother's heart, if it doesn't kill her.

• • • •

We are fine people and have a beautiful home. If he marries her he is degrading himself. We ask this question over an over again! What can he see in her? But no one seems able to answer it. What do you think?

• • • •

My father has a good looking girl of 23 working in his office. My brother, when he is angry at his fiancee (as he sometimes is) will ask this girl to movies and dances. She goes with him willingly, although she knows all about his love for the other woman. We all like this girl who works for dad. Although brother is 10 years older than she is, do you think this would make a difference?

• • • •

What do you think of my brother? None of us are able to make him out. A better boy one couldn't meet. Please answer soon, as mother, father and I will be looking for your opinion. BIG SISTER.

What to Think.

DEAR BIG SISTER: What do I think of your brother? Well, for one thing, I think if he—at 33—lets his family choose his wife for him he must be a first class chump. And I don't think much of him for going out with another girl at times when he is angry with his fiancee. If he is engaged to marry one woman, he has no business raising matrimonial hopes in some other girl's breast. If your brother is financially independent of his father, mother and sister; has been making his own way for years and is in a position to support a wife, I think all of you should mind your own business better than you seem to have been minding it in his regard.

• • • •

Maybe the reason your brother likes this girl—she of the "odd type, so different" from all of you—is because she is so different from what he has known at home. You admit none of you have ever understood him. And since none of you understand the girl he has expressed a wish to marry, it may well be that they are two of a kind, eminently suited to each other, who would be enduringly happy as husband and wife.

• • • •

What makes you think he would be degrading himself in marrying her? You haven't given any facts to substantiate this extremely harsh prediction. Personally, I detest persons who point to their beautiful homes as proof of the fact that they are fine people.

• • • •

If your brother's marriage to this girl is a bitter blow to your mother's pride or plans, I hope she has the decency, strength and dignity to keep this fact to herself. If she is a woman of any character, the marriage won't kill her. It's a pretty poor person who can't survive painful disappointments inflicted at the hands of loved ones. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Pageant of Velvet Marches Across Stage

New York, (AP).—A pageant of velvets marches across the fashion stage, designed to do duty from luncheon to supper. The stiffer versions such as Lyons and taffeta-backed velvets were used by a number of Paris designers for afternoon suits and evening frocks, while American designers used a number of velveteens for daytime shirtwaist frocks and street suits.

A new treatment said to make velvets shed water and an advanced weave credited with making those so handled almost impervious to crushing and wrinkling are among developments in this year's fabrics.

Height Stressed In Milady's Hats

Paris (U.P.).—Erik, the young Danish milliner who started out as a window draper and today hats the most fashionable women in Europe, stresses height in all of the hats of his new midseason collection.

This height is achieved by thimble-shaped crowns and stiff feather trimming which juts high in front. Tall wings are used instead of flowers as trimming, berets jut upward and forward and even large-brimmed straw hats have a forward and upward movement.

For garden party formal afternoon wear, Erik uses a round cartwheel of straw posed on a dipping skull cap of taffeta, faille or straw. Last year's hats of this kind had shallow crowns an inch or so high, but Erik does away completely with a crown by placing the wide, round disc-like brim on the very tip of the head.

Sometimes he shows the brim in a contrasting color to the skullcap underneath, or again the skullcap and the lining of the brim will be in the same shade.

'Portia' Points Way to Top for Working Wives

Says Ability Breaks Old Prejudice Against Career Women.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

SUBSCRIBING to the "chip-on-the-shoulder" attitude and insisting on being treated "exactly like a man" are two sure ways for a woman to fail to get ahead in a so-called man's profession.

That, anyway, is a conclusion of Miss Mildred Pack (Mrs. Joseph T. Bergeron) of Cleveland, now in Washington with her husband who came to attend the national convention of Delta Theta Phi, legal fraternity.

"I don't think any career-woman should worry one minute about this business of whether she is, or isn't, a victim of discrimination just because she's a woman," Mrs. Bergeron said yesterday in her suite at the Mayflower. "That's one thing I've never bothered about. I believe any woman who does will be constantly on a tension, can never do her best in her profession, and will antagonize every man with whom she comes in contact."

Insist on Nothing.

Men also resent the woman who militantly insists she "is just as good a lawyer if not better than any of her male associates and therefore deserves to be accepted on the same level with them," Mrs. Bergeron believes. "A woman in any line of work has a much better chance to succeed if she doesn't insist on anything—particularly her rights. If she proves her ability, she won't have to; if she can't prove her ability, her rights aren't important, so far as her profession is concerned."

Her own experience has taught Mrs. Bergeron that when her male associates try to be patronizing or indulgent toward her, "it is best not to try to change their attitude. After all, if I'm ever given any edge because I happen to be a woman, I try to make the most of it. Men certainly make the most of any advantage they may have."

Never "a Victim."

She mentioned that while she conducts a general law practice, numerous domestic relations and probate cases fall to her lot because she is in a firm composed largely of men. "Domestic relations cases are supposed to be particularly suited to women lawyers, and probate work includes details men like to avoid," she averred. "I suppose each time one of these cases comes my way, or is turned over to me by one of my male associates, I might consider I am a victim of discrimination. But I don't, because I really like those cases."

Mrs. Bergeron believes any woman with a career is fortunate if her husband has the same type of career. "I may be prejudiced in this opinion, because my husband is a lawyer," she said, "but I'm convinced that marriages stand a better chance for success when the husband and wife follow the same line of work. They understand each other's problems better, they can help each other, and they have a common bond of interests."

Two weeks ago, Mrs. Bergeron was in Boston attending the national convention of Phi Delta Delta, women's legal sorority, of which she is vice president. "But here in Washington my husband is the official convention attender," she said. "I'm merely a spectator."

Tells Women How to Climb in Man's Work

Clean and pick over clams, using 1 cup cold water; drain, reserve liquor, heat to boiling point and strain. Chop finely hard part of clams; cut pork in small pieces and try out; add onion; fry 5 minutes and strain into a stewpan. Parboil potatoes 5 minutes in boiling water to cover; drain and put a layer in bottom of stewpan add chopped clams, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and dredge generously with flour; add remaining potatoes, again sprinkle with salt and pepper, dredge with flour, and add 2½ cups boiling water. Cook 10 minutes, add milk, soft part of clams and butter; boil 3 minutes and add crackers split and soaked in enough cold milk to moisten. Reheat clam water to boiling point and thicken with one tablespoon butter and flour cooked together. Add to chowder just before serving.

The clam water has a tendency to make the milk seperate, hence it is added last.

Youth Found Lax in Replies To Invitations

Hostess Is Always Entitled to Prompt, Direct Answer.

By Margaret Wallace.

THE ANNOYANCE caused to the hostess by those who fail to respond promptly to invitations to luncheons and dinners has been pointed out in a letter from a harassed mother of a Washington sub-debutante. This mother wishes to entertain her daughter's friends before the daughter returns to college in the fall. She has taxed her family budget to give a series of luncheons and dinners, but the expenses have been more because the young people invited do not answer invitations. Her letter follows:

DEAR MISS WALLACE: This is indeed an age of thoughtless youth. I have been more than annoyed recently because the friends of my son and daughter fail to answer invitations I have sent them to dinner and to luncheon. I have found it almost impossible to plan such events. I am giving a series of parties in order that my daughter, of sub-debutante age, may entertain her friends before she returns to college. I sent out written invitations for the dinners and luncheons. Very few of the young people answered at all, and most of these waited until the last minute. Some of them simply told my son and daughter they were coming. Consequently, although I called up the guests, or tried to call them, I found that many of them had mixed the dates or lost the invitations. At each dinner and luncheon I have had more guests than I at first planned for, and thus the expenses have been increased. We taxed the family budget to give these entertainments, as my daughter goes to a distant college and will not be able to be here at all this winter.

Prompt Reply Necessary.

The young people are very rude. It should not be necessary for you to call them after you sent them a written invitation. You could with great propriety insist that they attend the dinners or luncheons on the dates you invited them. Invitations to meals should be answered at once. It was not proper for the guests you invited to tell your son and daughter they accepted. You are the hostess and all acceptances should be made to you and not relayed through any one else. It strikes me that this group of young people need a lesson in manners.

Cracking Down on Dope

Good Old Edith's Wagging Tongue Breaks $300,000 'Frisco Narcotic Ring.

By Gerald G. Gross.

Good old Edith.

But for her, shivering and insignificant peddler-addict that she was, the Federal Government today might be blissfully ignorant of one of the most nefarious smuggling rings that ever defied this Nation's laws.

She was the starting link in a chain of circumstances that ultimately led to the arrest and conviction of the Ezra twins, Judah and Isaac, whose traffic in opium, morphine, cocaine and heroin aggregated $1,000,000 a year.

Edith M., arrested in San Francisco on April 17, 1933, squealed that Annie was the source of her supply. Annie, in turn, snitched on Florence, who snitched on Julius, who snitched on Amelia, who snitched on John, who uncovered the big shots, the Ezras.

The underworld prides itself on the frozen tongues of its denizens who fall into the law's hands. This highly romantic "code of honor," which probably is more fancied than real, is painfully damaged by events in this case. For it was a contagious epidemic of tongue-wagging that put the Shanghai twins behind the bars for 12 years, resulted in confiscation of about $300,000 in narcotics and destroyed an international band of criminals.

Had there been a precedent, a medal might have been struck to reward the "snow" sniffing woman, whose busy mouth was responsible for the coup. In lieu of that, she was given her freedom.

Two Others Freed.

Annie and Florence also were turned loose. But there clemency stopped.

The narrative, destined to span the Pacific and reach into China's fields of waving poppies, moved swiftly once it got under steam. Exactly one month after Edith M. committed the error of selling a few dollars worth of morphine to a stool pigeon, the net was drawn tight about Judah and Isaac Ezra, profligate sons of a Shanghai millionaire, and their underlings.

Four days after the Federals knocked off Edith, she introduced them to Annie. The latter, following her customer's example of spilling the beans to obtain leniency, led the agents to Florence, who was seized with three bundles of morphine in her possession.

"Don't make me the goat," she pleaded. "Come up to my apartment tomorrow and you'll see something interesting."

So the dope chasers, satisfied with their progress so far, but wondering where it would all end, gave her some marked money and concealed themselves in the woman's flat. Presently they saw three men enter, deposit a packet on the table and accept the bills proffered by Florence.

That ended the squealing cycle—temporarily. Julius Stern, Earl King and William Carr, the trio seized at the rendezvous arranged by Florence, were convicted and sentenced to five, three and four years, respectively. The case, it seemed, was washed up.

Re-opened With Bang.

But Amelia Cuneo reopened it with a bang less than three weeks later. Twenty-five years old, not bad looking, and an opium smoker, she had delivered 27 ounces of morphine into Stern's hands for safekeeping just prior to his arrest and she was angry indeed. That much stuff was worth $1,000 to her and she intended to find out what he had done with it.

So, doggone her nerve, if she didn't march right into the county jail and demand Stern tell her where that dope was. He obliged. Hardly had he told her where it was hidden and she had gone that he summoned a narcotics agent.

"Pss-t. Pss-t."

The gabfest was on again.

That night a secret reception committee was waiting when the Cuneo woman walked into Stern's house in San Francisco, and, following instructions given her at the jail, extracted the 27 ounces from a cache. Collared with the goods, she promptly disclaimed ownership.

"Get John Rose," she advised. "This stuff belongs to him."

Thanks to her assistance, Rose was captured next day along with Leong Chung, a 65-year-old Chinese-American with a wife and seven children. It was the former who blew off the lid. By opening his mouth, Rose revealed a smuggling enterprise that staggered officials on two continents.

"Meet me in front of the library tomorrow at 11 a. m.," he told his captors.

At the appointed time and place, with agents planted nearby, Rose drove up alone. A few minutes later a dark complexioned, well dressed man approached the car. He got in and the pair drove away.

Judah Ezra Taken.

Presently Rose returned on foot. After a short wait, he was joined by the stranger, also on foot, who handed him a key. The agents closed in. Rose led them to the machine, parked a few blocks distant. Inside the car—opened with the key whose transfer the officers had witnessed—was found a carton containing 30 ounces of morphine.

The stranger was Judah I. Ezra, British subject, 41, married, no children, "real estate dealer." His brother Isaac was taken into custody two days later. He was an American citizen, 41, married, two children, "real estate dealer."

The twins were the sons of the late Isaac Ezra, who died in China 20 years ago, after having accumulated a fortune estimated at upward of $20,000,000 as head of the Shanghai Opium Combine. The monopoly, which passed from existence in 1917, was a legal enterprise which imported opium from British India.

A San Francisco business man, seeing the younger Isaac's picture in the papers on the day of his arrest, communicated with authorities.

"I know that man," he reported. "But he told me his name is W. D. Gray when he rented my Kansas street warehouse."

So narcotics agents visited the warehouse next day. They found 50 drums of tung oil, eight of which contained secret inner drums. Around the exterior of these drums within drums were cleverly contrived compartments, ideal for contraband. The federals were disappointed, if not surprised, to discover the pockets were filled with rags instead of dope. The "stuff" they realized had been removed previously.

Customs agents, called in for help, uncovered the following valuable information (remember, the government still had little important evidence against the Ezra twins):

The tung oil, also known as wood oil and which is used as a substitute for linseed oil in the manufacture of paints and varnishes, had arrived in San Francisco from Shanghai March 7 aboard the S. S. Chichibu Maru. Shipped by a Shanghai firm, it was consigned to Donald Gray & Co., by H. S. Hamlin.

"Donald Gray & Co." was Isaac Ezra and "H. S. Hamlin" was his brother Judah. By cablegram and naval radio, Washington headquarters of the Bureau of Narcotics sought to learn what were the Ezra's Shanghai connections and whether more tung oil was on order.

Consular and native officials in China's most cosmopolitan city not only produced incriminating data on the Ezra drugs' origin, but reported another shipment of 50 drums, by and to the same parties, was then en route to San Francisco and scheduled to arrive June 2 or 3 on the S. S. Asama Maru.

The suspense experienced by a youngster awaiting Santa Claus on Christmas Eve is negligible compared to the excitement of those customs and narcotics sleuths as they impatiently watched the calendar. Isaac Ezra was being held only on suspicion and the evidence against his twin, while sufficient to warrant indictment, was nothing extraordinary.

To them it seemed months, instead of days, until the great day came. Or, rather, the great night. For dusk had long since fallen when the agents, armed with a search warrant, descended upon the Japanese steamer June 2.

Fifty drums of tung oil, sure enough, consigned to "Donald Gray & Co." were found in the hold. The raiders went to work with crowbars and pick axes. Their exertion was amply rewarded.

Eight of the 50 drums were found to be structurally identical with those seized in the Kansas street warehouse the previous month. True, the inner drums contained tung oil. But wrapped around their sides, nestling between the inner and outer containers, was enough high-grade narcotics to supply an army of addicts.

Nine hundred and eight 5-tael tins of smoking opium.

Twenty 2-tael tins of the same.

Forty-five packages of morphine, agregating 135 ounces.

Sixty ounces of cocaine.

Three packages of heroin.

Wholesale value of the haul was, conservatively, $300,000. Users would have paid almost $2,000,000 for the drugs.

Santa Claus had arrived.

Diversion Thwarted.

Subsequent investigation disclosed the fact that Judah Ezra, working through a henchman who visited him in the county jail, had attempted to divert delivery of the huge consignment to Los Angeles. The plan failed.

The Ezra twins are serving 12 years each in McNeil Island Penitentiary. Each was fined $12,000. After pleading guilty, Judah Ezra told agents they would find 497 ounces of morphine concealed in his home if they looked. They looked and found. His motive in betraying the cache, apparently, was two fold: To invite the court's leniency and minimize his brother's guilt.

"I'm the boss," he said. "Isaac had nothing to do with it."

Some authorities on the case believed, on the contrary, that the American twin was the real brains of the gang. For one thing, he was in San Francisco in 1931 when shipments of tung oil began arriving regularly from Shanghai. Judah did not come to this country until 1932, although he undoubtedly was responsible for arranging shipments.

Rose, the peddler who gave away the Ezra brothers, was sentenced to a five-year term. Chung, arrested with him, got two years. The Cuneo woman, who tattled on Rose, drew two years. Carr, King and Stern, seized together after Florence Moore "talked," received penitentiary terms but Stern was probationed as a reward for his loquacity. Frank L. Barris, who failed to divert delivery of the incriminating cargo of tung oil, drew down a two-year sentence.

Chinese authorities, working on their end of the case, obtained several convictions.

Good old Edith.

★★★★ X WASHINGTON: FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1936 17

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Samuel Lubell.

Developments in the A. F. G. E. political situation are flying fast and furious.

The movement to recall National Treasurer Cecil E. Custer and Vice Presidents Ira Y. Bain, Michael D. Schaefer and G. Carroll Diamond is gaining ground. The executive committees of six out-of-town lodges are reported to have written to the so-called "new deal" lodges assuring them of support, while the Interstate Commerce Commission Lodge in this city has gone on record in favor of the recall. The action was taken at a meeting last Friday and, we were told, was voted unanimously.

As predicted in this column several days ago, the "red" attack of the conservative leaders has proven somewhat of a boomerang. Some of the "new deal" lodges have become so incensed that they are planning a vigorous protest to the Civil Service Commission. The commissioners are going to be asked whether or not they approve of "high officials" in the commission making blanket "red" charges.

Babcock's decision not to be a candidate for re-election is not expected to create much of a stir as his action had been discounted in advance. His letter to E. R. Perkins, of the State Department Lodge, however, has cleared the political atmosphere somewhat. With "Babs" gone the presidential race seems to be narrowing down to a choice between John R. W. Smith, of War Department Lodge, No. 92, New York, and Col. Charles I. Stengle, who is being championed by the conservatives.

The announcement of the candidacy of Smith has come as a stimulant to the six so-called "new deal" lodges who initiated recall proceedings. The threat of conservative leaders to wage a "hell and high water fight" to oust them at Detroit, dismayed them somewhat. The "red" attack added to their dismay. But with Smith in the field, leftists feel they can unite behind him in sufficient strength to beat any attempt at expulsion. At the convention the conservative leaders will be confronted with the problem of dealing not with a recalcitrant minority of six to twelve lodges but with an organized opposition representing a substantial portion of the lodge membership.

Harry V. Bates, who has been with the Interstate Commerce Commission since 1914, is slated to succeed E. M. Graney who retired Monday as head of the mail and files section of the traffic division.

Quaint Face Club.

If you have a quaint face and don't know what to do with it, you might join a new club that has been organized in the Old Postoffice section of the Department of Agriculture. The organization, which is known as the Quaint Face Club, was formed less than a month ago and already has 40 members.

President of the club is Francis L. Keohan. Since he was chosen as the most representative member we asked for his description and this is what we got: Red-hair with the head beginning to show traces of baldness, small grayish-brown eyes, a pointed chin, ruddy complexion with lined, hollow cheeks and a long, thin "hawk-like" nose.

Other officers are Thomas Maholn, vice president; Thomas Murphy, secretary, and Neal Zimmers, treasurer. All you need to join the club is a quaint face and, we've been told, a passport photo will almost do the trick.

Civil Service Jobs.

The $6,500 a year position of director of education of the Bureau of Indian Affairs is to be filled by Civil Service examination. The post, which has been vacant since the resignation about a year ago of Carson Ryan, is being held temporarily now by Willard W. Beatty. Applications will be accepted until September 21.

Examinations are scheduled for aeronautical engineers, from $2,600 to $4,600 a year, and agricultural aids in the Soil Conservation Service from $1,260 to $2,000 a year. Application deadline is September 21.

Applications also are being accepted until Thursday for the position of sailmaker at the Washington Navy Yard. Compensation ranges from $7.10 to $8.06 a day for a 40-hour week.

Deadlines for two examinations have been extended, that for medical officers with salaries ranging from $2,600 to $3,800 a year to September 15, and that for supervisor of boys of the National Training School for boys in this city, to Thursday.

Notes:

Five Government employes, all honor graduates of the Benjamin Franklin University Accountancy School, have been elected to the National Association of Cost Accountants. They are Clyde V. Cuson, medicine and surgery of the Navy; Rodham T. Delk, insolvent national banks, Treasury; Morris M. Goldberg, motor carriers bureau, I. C. C.; Archie B. McCoy, PWA, and Janet Smith, RFC.

Happy birthday cake to Fannie L. Dunlap, Florence C. Eckert, Mrs. Frances W. McDaniel, George W. Morse and Mrs. Beulah K. Pence, all of the Adjutant General's Office of the War Department. Newest recruit to the publication staff of Labor Standards at the Department of Labor is Michael O'Connor, of New York. Ann Rossner, formerly of Procurement, is doing nicely with the vehicle and traffic section of the District government. Apparently the fact that she was married to Isadore Pitt shortly before the transfer hasn't hurt her style.

Fidelity Head Gains Second Trial Delay

Embezzlement charges against Fred B. Rhodes, former chairman of the board of directors of the closed Fidelity Building & Loan Association, were continued for a second time yesterday when he was arraigned before Police Court Judge John P. McMahon.

Rhodes is at liberty under a $5,000 bond. When he appeared before Judge McMahon for a preliminary hearing yesterday, the Government requested a continuance until October 1. A similar continuance was granted when Rhodes was first arraigned soon after his arrest several weeks ago.

A.F.G.E. Bloc To Ask A.F.L. Ignore Fight

'New Deal' Lodges Will Interview Green on Proposal.

Groups Also Plan Protest to Civil Service on 'Red' Charges.

William F. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, will be asked to keep that group out of the factional dispute in the American Federation of Government Employes, it was learned last night.

The request that the delegates to the A. F. G. E. convention in Detroit September 14 be permitted to fight out their battles without intervention from the A. F. of L. will be made of Green in an interview with representatives of one of the six so-called "New Deal" lodges who are leading the fight for the recall of four of the conservative leaders from their posts on the A. F. G. E. executive council.

The "New Deal" lodges also plan a vigorous protest to the Civil Service Commission against the "red" accusations supposed to have been raised against the lodges by "a high official of the Civil Service Commission," it was learned.

A letter of protest has been sent to the commission by at least one of the lodges, it was learned, and it is planned to send a delegation of representatives from one or all six of the lodges to call on the commissioners today.

Recall Vote.

Other developments in the A. F. G. E. political situation yesterday were a vote to support the recall movement initiated by the "New Deal" lodges by the Interstate Commerce Commission Lodge, and the dismissal by mutual agreement of the preliminary injunction suit brought by Justice Lodge, No. 21, to lift the suspension voted several weeks ago by the national executive council.

The interview with Green, which has tentatively been set for either this afternoon or some time Tuesday, was sought, it is understood, because of a report that George Googe, A. F. of L. representative in Atlanta, will be designated chairman of the Detroit convention. Left-wingers are anxious to obtain from Green the promise that Googe will not use his convention position to "steamroll" the opposition to the conservative leaders, but will permit "democratic discussion" of all issues.

The loyalty of the "New Deal" lodges to the A. F. of L. is expected to be pointed out and Green will be assured that all rumors that the leftwingers would bolt the A. F. G. E. if they were defeated are false.

In protesting to the Civil Service Commission, the "New Deal" units hope to secure from the Commissioners a disavowal of the accusations attributed to a "high commission official that can be used by the leftwingers to offset the "Red" campaign being conducted by conservative leaders.

The "Communist" accusations against which they are protesting were contained in what purported to be an interview in one of the local newspapers with an unnamed "high official" of the commission. In their letter to the commission one of the lodges asked whether the statements attributed to this official are representative of the commission's views, and if not whether the commissioners felt it was right for a civil service employe to allow the commission's name to be used and not his own.

Ogburn Letter.

The agreement to dismiss Justice Lodge's preliminary injunction suit, leaving the suit for a permanent injunction still pending, was based on a letter submitted to the Justice Lodge attorney by Charlton Ogburn, the A. F. G. E. lawyer, in which the lodge was promised a hearing before the full executive council in Detroit next Friday. The five Washington members of the executive council also promised to recommend to the council that the previous suspension of the lodge be revoked and that the hearing be conducted on an entirely fresh basis.

This promise, it was understood, left the five members of the executive council free to vote a fresh suspension of the lodge, if they chose. Justice Lodge members said they expect the council would go through the formalities of a new hearing and suspend the lodge a second time, and are looking to the convention to determine whether or not they are to stay in the A. F. G. E.

Support of the movement to recall National Treasurer Cecil E. Custer and Vice Presidents Ira Y. Bain, G. Carroll Dimond and Michael D. Schaefer was voted by the Interstate Commerce Commission Lodge at a recent meeting.

The I. C. C. Lodge is the first to join the six lodges who initiated the recall proceedings. Veterans Administration, Labor Lodge No. 12, Resettlement, WPA, Beltsville and Agriculture.

He will take the usual entrance examination March 2, 1937, and if successful, he will become a student at the Academy the following July 1.

The Marriage Business Booms

Miss Aderiano Sansone and George Denham, both of New York, get a license to wed at the District Court and add another digit to figures which show that better times mean more marriages.

Marriage, Divorce Boom Here Called a Sign of Better Times

Prosperity Index Is Operating at Full Speed; Increase of 2,000 in Weddings, Continued Gain in Separations Reported in City.

The return to better business conditions has speeded up a couple of District activities besides the purchase of automobiles, fancy ash trays, fur coats and silk stockings, records of the marriage license bureau and divorce courts show.

Every year since 1932, the bottom of the depression, more and more couples have been buying marriage licenses. They've also been buying more divorce decrees.

This situation, far from being confined to the District, is pretty general throughout the country, a Nationwide survey proves. Statisticians who made the survey point out that just as the marriage business took an upward turn after the all-time low in 1932, so did the divorce business pick up rapidly.

Both weddings and divorces cost money; hence, their popularity fluctuates not with the beauty of the season, but with the availability of the dollar. When money is plentiful, so is romance, the statistics prove.

The marriage license business in the District is positively booming, Mrs. Maud Rynex, the marriage license clerk, said yesterday.

"Nineteen-thirty-five was a big year but at the rate we're going, 1936 will be even bigger," she beamed.

Expects 2,000 Increase.

Last year she sold 6,833 licenses, a gain of 1,735 over the number sold in 1932. When all the 1936 returns are in it is likely that Mrs. Rynex will beat the 1932 figure by 2,000.

Part of that increase is undoubtedly due to the increase in Washington's population since the New Dealers came to town. But, say the statisticians, other sections of the country have not had great gains in population and yet their marriage rate has gone up like a rocket. It must be the return, or at least the approach, of prosperity.

The same is true of the divorce situation. While the District's new liberal law which went into effect a year ago has certainly been responsible for part of the spurt in divorces here, it could have had no effect on the rest of the country.

And yet, from Maine to Oregon and from Wisconsin to Alabama, the number of dissolved marriages has grown from year to year since 1932. During the period between 1932 and 1935 they rose 37 per cent. And the courts report no drop in business thus far in 1936. In fact, they expect this to be the biggest divorce year in the history of the country.

Aside from the figures submitted by statisticians of private business concerns, there are no available estimates on divorces and marriages in the country as a whole since 1932. The economy act of that year did away with funds the Census Bureau had been using to carry on that branch of its work.

The statisticians for private enterprises, however, surveyed 18 States, considered a fair cross-section of the United States. While the increase in divorces for the period between 1932 and 1935 was 37 per cent for the section studied, the increase varied in the different States.

Alabama's divorce rate during those three years rose 68 per cent. Florida's jumped up 58 per cent. The rise in Nebraska and Wisconsin was at least 50 per cent and in Michigan it was 41 per cent. The New England States showed the smallest increases, ranging from 12 to less than 22 per cent.

Other States studied were Virginia, South Dakota, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire, Iowa Maryland, Indiana, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine and Mississippi.

While marriages and divorces go up with good times and down with bad, the birth rate seems to remain disappointingly steady. Although the Census Bureau has only estimates—not exact figures—it has fairly good reason to believe that only one person is being born every 14 seconds this year. That is the same rate as in 1933, 1934 and 1935.

Oddly enough, when marriages and divorces touched bottom in 1932, the birth rate went up. One person was born every 13 seconds in that year.

The District birth rate, tabulated in exact figures, shows considerably more variation than the Nationwide estimates. In 1932 there were 10,184 births. The next year there was a drop to 9,932, following the all-time low in marriages, the preceding year. Since 1933 there has been a steady increase in births. In 1934 the total was 10,023. In 1935 it was 10,850. In the first six months of this year it reached 5,678.

A total of 74 indictments was returned to Justice Joseph W. Cox by the grand jury. Charges were ignored in five cases.

Maryland Seeks Pair.

Marshall, and Fred Graves, sr., who was accused of causing the death of Jessie Smith last July. All concerned were colored.

List of Indictments.

Herron, John Williams, Arthur Jackson, Arthur Washington, Daniel Brown, William Raffin, Henry Grover, Daniel Davis, Harry Hargrove, Normand A. Maynard, John H. Burrell and Normand A. McClain, Ophelia Governor, Isaac Miller, Rose Chesevoir, Solomon H. Chesevoir, William C. Ryan, Howard R. Seal, William H. Howard, Yetta Goldberg, Victor B. Wheatley, Jesse E. Dairy Worker Dies in Crash; 3 Others Hurt

John W. Knapp Is Killed Near Fredericksburg; Wife Injured.

Woman, Baby Knocked Down by Taxicab Near Tidal Basin.

John W. Knapp, of 1332 D street northeast, an employe of Chestnut Farms Dairy, was killed yesterday in an automobile accident near Fredericksburg, Va.

His wife, Mrs. Etta L. Knapp, who works at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, was seriously injured as were Joseph and Richard Herman, both of Baltimore, Md., with whose car the Knapps' collided.

At the time of the accident the Knapps were on a vacation trip to Yorktown, Va.

The accident occurred when the Knapps' car skidded on the wet road. Mrs. Knapp, who was driving, lost control, police said, and the machine plunged into the Hermans' car.

Injured Are in Hospital.

The injured are at the Mary Washington Hospital at Fredericksburg. Mrs. Knapp with both legs broken, Richard Herman, with a broken left leg, and his brother with a fractured nose.

Mrs. Lizzie Johnson, 38, and her 16-month-old son, Henry, both of Greys Hill Inn, Va., were injured slightly when struck by a taxicab on Fourteenth street northwest, near the Tidal Basin. Mrs. Johnson was carrying her son in her arms.

As she stepped from the curb, the woman apparently failed to see the taxi and was hurled to the street. The baby was knocked from her arms and thrown several feet. The taxi driver, Joseph Walters, 47, of the 100 block of R street northwest, took the injured mother and child to Emergency Hospital.

Given First-Aid Treatment.

Physicians said Mrs. Johnson suffered contusions to her leg and the baby was cut about the face and head. Both were released after first-aid treatment.

Scheduled to face Federal charges in addition to traffic counts after the automobile he was driving struck and killed a man during a wild police chase Tuesday night, John W. Hamilton, 19, of the 1700 block of Eighteenth street northwest, remained in the District Jail awaiting arraignment before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage.

Hamilton, allegedly driving a car stolen in Maryland, will be charged under Federal law providing penalties for transporting stolen property across a State line, police announced.

Held for Grand Jury.

A coroner's jury held Hamilton for grand jury action in connection with the death of George R. Awalt, jr., 29-year-old Naval Hospital pharmacist's mate. Awalt was killed by Hamilton's speeding machine as he stepped from his own parked car near Lanier place and Ontario road northwest.

Hamilton, according to police, was attempting to elude a pursuing Third Precinct radio car. After the accident, the youth leaped from the car and fled. He was arrested several hours later at his home.

Nuptials Soon, Says Diplomat; Girl He Picked Says Maybe

Senor Don Manuel Crespo, young attache of the Ecuadorean Legation, may or may not be married today—or perhaps tomorrow—to a Pittsburgh school teacher.

Or, perhaps, there'll be no ceremony at all.

"Tomorrow or the next day," Senor Crespo said yesterday.

"I think the ceremony will be tomorrow," said Senor Capitan Colon Eloy Alfaro, Minister from Ecuador.

"Not for two or three months anyway," said the prospective bride, Miss Sallie Hunter, "and I'm not sure I will then."

The only thing certain about the reported romance is that Senor Crespo and Miss Hunter met while both were vacationing at Rehoboth Beach, Del. According to the diplomat, it was a case of love at first sight. He still is at the resort but Miss Hunter was back home yesterday, issuing denials that their marriage was a matter of days.

According to reports from Pittsburgh, Miss Hunter admitted an acquaintanceship with the attache and said he would visit her soon. Plans for a wedding, however, are still very indefinite, she asserted.

In addition to F. Scott Fitzgerald, Mrs. Fitzgerald is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Clifton Sprague, of Norfolk, Va., and by a brother-in-law, J. Harry Fitzgerald, of 1731 Riggs place northwest.

Funeral plans have not been complete, but burial will be in St. Mary's Cemetery, Rockville. The body is at the Colonial funeral home in Rockville.

Traffic Hazard to Be Eliminated

A menace to vehicles, especially at night, for more than a year, this landslide on the Rock Creek and Potomac parkway will be eliminated soon by raising the road level sufficiently to take in the protruding "toe." This photo was taken from Q street bridge. The road will be closed during removal of the slide.

Reported Link Of Gang, Police Faces Inquiry

All Rumors Will Be Run Down, Says Brown in Formal Order.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, yesterday issued formal orders calling for an investigation of alleged connection between members of the Police Department and gamblers and bootleggers.

The orders went to Capt. Ira Keck, assistant chief of detectives, who has been put in charge of the investigation which was decided upon after repeated rumors that there was a link between police headquarters and the "Warring gang," alleged numbers and liquor racketeers.

As he issued the order calling for the investigation, Maj. Brown said, "Every rumor will be run down. I promise a thorough probe of the charges."

The police superintendent indicated he believed the department has kept its house clean when he said that in the last four years six members of the force have been dropped for taking "graft."

Two of these men, he said, were convicted of accepting money for "fixing" traffic tickets while the others were charged with taking "protection" money from bootleggers.

Capt. Keck will be assisted by Lieut. Floyd Truscott in his investigation. All other plans remain secret.

It was learned that the investigation will be conducted on a strictly "undercover" basis. Capt. Keck has been given permission to draft any men in the department he sees fit. All possible ffforts will be made to keep their identity secret from other members of the force, it was said.

Court Cuts Bonds Of Theft Suspects

The bonds of three colored men, indicted for robbery along with John William Tomlinson, Washington attorney, were lowered yesterday by order of Justice Joseph W. Cox in the District Supreme Court.

Pointing out that Tomlinson—described by police as the "master mind"—had been released on $2,000 bond, James K. Hughes and Juan R. Quijano, attorneys for the three colored men, asked that their clients be given equal consideration.

Over protests of Assistant United States Attorney Irvin Goldstein, Justice Cox fixed bond for Philip John Pratt, held on two charges of robbery, at $3,000, and bond for Walter Smallwood and Charles Henry Bass, implicated in only one charge, at $2,000 each.

Meantime, Tomlinson, accompanied by his attorney, James A. O'Shea, veteran criminal lawyer, appeared before Justice Cox and asked for five days' time within which to consider what procedure he will adopt to combat the charge that he "master-minded" the robbery of the Fairfax Farms Dairy and of Sam Sartonis' tailor shop.

Roses to Bloom At Annual Show In Potomac Unit

Garden Clubs of Maryland, Virginia and District to Sponsor Event.

Thomas Gray, author of that well-known lament about the poor rose that was "born to blush unseen and waste its fragrance on the desert air," would like the atmosphere in the foyer of the new National Museum next month.

The fourth annual Potomac Rose Show will be given there October 10-11.

The show is sponsored by the Potomac Rose Society, in co-operation with the garden clubs, civic organizations and the Florists Club of Washington, the garden clubs of nearby Virginia and Maryland, the Rose Society of Maryland and the Garden Club of Virginia.

The exhibit will consist of seven divisions, with 27 separate classifications. Division 1 will consist of roses from the 2,000 or more household rose gardens of the homes in this area—an amateur award. Other divisions will be as follows:

Two, new varieties produced by the rose breeders of Europe and America; 3, roses of commerce much in demand; 4, hybrid roses being introduced to commerce; 5, older varieties from grandmother's time; 6, baskets and bowls of roses prepared by different garden clubs of this area, and 7, greenhouse roses in attractive design.

Allen-Baker Playgrounds Debate Ends

Latter Has Last Word; Didn't Aim Criticism at All of WPA.

McMillan, N. Y. Avenue Projects to Resume in Near Future.

The debate between Commissioner George E. Allen and Miss Sibyl Baker, director of playgrounds, over efficiency of the local Works Progress Administration was ended yesterday, but the latter insisted upon exercising the woman's prerogative of having the last word.

After Commissioner Allen, who is District WPA administrator, had inspected playground projects handled by the WPA and had admitted the validity of criticism against the McMillan and New York Avenue playgrounds, Miss Baker dispatched another note to him.

While declining to disclose its contents until noted by Allen, the playground director indicated she was further insisting that the WPA couldn't take the place of regular playground employes as expected by the Budget Bureau and that she had not intended to criticize the WPA as a whole.

Although Allen admitted failure of WPA in not completing the two playground projects singled out by Miss Baker, he insisted the class of work done at other playgrounds is satisfactory.

"Two mistakes out of 45 projects is not a bad record," he observed. A private contractor couldn't do much better."

Following the commissioner's inspection trip, in company with William C. Cleary, deputy WPA administrator, Frank O'Mahoney, safety engineer of the local WPA, was sent to the two playgrounds in question to determine what immediate steps should be taken to eliminate any hazards that may exist.

Allen also promised that construction, stopped almost five months ago when skilled workmen were shifted to sewer jobs, will be resumed as soon as the employes are available.

Upon visiting the New York avenue playground, Allen found loose piles of lumber in an old shelter house and the condition of the uncompleted playhouse dangerous to children who might invade it. At McMillan he found three pits near an uncompleted brick building. In both places he found boards with exposed nails scattered about.

After admitting that these two playgrounds should never have been left in such condition, the commissioner inspected WPA work at the Park Vew playground, the Raymond playground, and the Twin Oaks playground.

Electric Organ Is Installed By Shoreham

Ida Clarke Entertains at Cocktail Hour; Russian Sensation Here.

By Chanticleer.

One of those new electrical organs has been installed at the Shoreham for the benefit of guests in the cocktail lounge and on the porch. And what an organ it is, with versatility that would shame a symphony. Ida Clarke, whose artistry at the console has been overlooked a bit since she began filling in with her accordion between dance groups, wafts sweet music over the Shoreham's "back yard" during the cocktail hour. The Shoreham believes it is the first hotel in the country to introduce organ music for afternoon cocktailers. Full justice is done the new instrument by Ida. You may remember she played in Washington theaters before the organ gave way to talkies.

Going to be in Baltimore next week? Drop in at the new Piccadilly, opening next Wednesday night, featuring a smash show under the direction of Bert Sherry. Did you say something about a novelty? Well, call it what you like, but Impresario Sherry has lined up a chorus of 12 dancing maidens—but they're all female impersonators!

Elsewhere on this page is the likeness of Prince Serge Abagoff, the dance sensation now showing how the Russians really do those whirling, swirling steps of the Steppes—at the Club Volga Boatman. As a finale, the prince does a dagger dance in which a great deal of the show depends on his ability at knife throwing. He doesn't miss, either. A target not more than 2 inches square.

Barbara Clarke, a handsome chorine at the Cocoanut Grove this week, has been working after school and is ready to present a specialty act. One of those truckin' numbers—with the aid of a cane. She's from Atlanta and lives up to what everyone pictures a "Georgia peach" to be like. Bourban and Baine are being rated the McCoy in dance teams. This is Muriel Byrd's last week. If you like blues with splashes of real indigo, you'll hear Muriel.

Lenora's Debutantes are featured at the Lotus this week in a show running almost a full hour in length and displaying the talents of Connie Lee, Odette Brode, Betty O'Grady and many others.

More of the Russian influence. Maryland Club Gardens' new headwaiter is a handsome Russian, a walking, Texedoed textbook on the arts of dining and drinking. He is George. Late of the Belmont in New York and once upon a time a captain in the Czar's imperial army. No foolin', they say.

About the cover charge arrangement (or lack of it) at Boulevard Farms. It's a little complicated but it runs something like this: Positively no cover at any time but a minimum of $1 Saturday nights—and no cover or minimum Sundays. A minimum of 50 cents week nights. Important item for those who enjoy good food: The one-time chef of River Bend is now preparing the Boulevard Farms chicken dinners.

Architectural note from Brinkley's: The air is remarkably clear at all times because the ceilings are unusually high. Of course the ventilating system has something to do with it, too. Dancing to Johnny Rice's Orchestra.

Poultrymen's Strike Blamed Upon Tugwell

Pay of Workers Slashed to $11 a Week by Order, New Yorkers Say.

at one firm of contractors, but virtually all of the contractors in the New York area sought to establish the new lower rate, according to Lane. The strike followed. Lane said he will appeal to another Government agency—the Department of Labor—if another strike materializes.

View of Solicitor.

Before the order was signed by Tugwell, the Department's solicitor sent in part the following memorandum to the Secretary of Agriculture's office:

"If the labor union employes accept the cut in wages then of course no unfavorable results will follow. We will have accomplished in some degree the plain intendment of the statute. There is testimony in the record, however, that leads one to believe that th lbaor union will not accept a reduced scale of pay and if it does not a strike will follow.

"The record further contains testimony that in case of a strike by the unloaders, the truck drivers, coop handlers, shochtim (rabbinical slaughterers) and employes of the commission men will enable each and all to go out on a sympathetic strike, which, it is believed, will be accompanied by disorder and which, if the strike be successful in its early stages, undoubtedly will result in preventing live poultry going into New York City.

"The issuance of the order in its present form is to this extent a matter of policy of which you are the sole judge."

The Red Pavilion

By Pauline Stiles

SYNOPSIS.

Shortly after the World War Roger Mallard, handsome young Englishman, is embittered by the loss of hearing in one ear from a war injury. Mal has been raised by his godfather, William Grimwold, an actor. Grimmy persuades Mal to attend Maude Copley's New Year's Eve party, where he meets lovely young Pamella Wyeth, though he forgets her on meeting Zelda Manners. A month later Mal marries Zelda. After two years the marriage ends disastrously. In a rage at his failure to make a living on the stage Zelda flings a mirror at Mal and unknowingly destroys the hearing in his one good ear.

Chapter 4.

Grimwold got up with a ponderous deliberation.

"Don't talk," Mal said thickly. "Too much effort . . ."

Grimwold slowly advanced to meet him in the center of the room, and, shooting out a big fist, knocked him down. Mal fell sprawling. With each attempt he made to get up, Grimwold cuffed him back upon the floor.

"Look at me. Make an effort . . . I told you the next time you came home like this, I'd thrash you. Are you ready to give me your word of honor that you'll quit?"

After he had repeated this slowly three times, Mal nodded, his face crimson.

Grimwold dragged him up on his feet, led him across the room to a water basin and doused his head under a tap. Then he pushed the boy into a chair.

Mal slumped forward with his head in his hands.

Grimwold drew up a chair beside a table that separated them.

Mal's face turned sick. He clenched a trembling fist.

"If you start scribbling at me, I'll—"

"You—listen—to—me," Grimwold leveled a forefinger that shook slightly. He spoke slowly and with great emphasis. "You're right. We are done with scribbling—"

Mal's bloodshot eyes began to cling despairingly to Grimwold's lips.

"From now on we use this method."

A responsive flicker in Mal's eyes lighted a ray of hope in Grimwold's.

"I've been pretty patient. At first, I thought this reaction of yours natural—all circumstances considered, including your brand of temperament. But it's gone on too long. Are you ready to pull yourself together and take it on the chin?"

His Chance.

Grimwold repeated this until Mal, with a gleam of sardonic humor, rubbed his chin as if he had already taken it there.

"It's about time you began to play cricket. I'm ready to go on helping you. You've had seven months' instruction from the best expert in Europe, and have only about half applied yourself. If you befuddle your brain nightly, what progress can you expect • • • You have everything in your favor—more than most poor devils in your position have. You're young, to begin with. You've spent your entire life with people who make their living by the way they use their lips and tongues and faces. You lapped in all the tricks of diction with your mother's milk. You have a perfectly placed voice yourself and know how to manage it. Your own diction is practically flawless—I've seen to that since you were a child. You have a brain as quick as a squirrel! And finally you've a beauty of person and mind—except when you debase it—that might be made use of profitably for everybody's good. • • • Mal—do you know what I've been saying?"

Mal's stony face began to quiver with such a white-hot look of astonishment that Grimwold, for an instant, was almost undone.

"My God—Grimmy—I believe—I believe I do——"

"Very well, then, go on listening," Grimwold said gruffly, "for my category of your acquired and innate assets leads me to something important. • • • Today that American cinema star I met in Hollywood had tea with me here—Rose Stanton——"

Grimwold paused and through a blur in his eyes watched Mal's face. A tremendous battle of doubt and fearful hope and amazed delight was going on there.

"The name—again—please—"

"Rose Stanton—"

"Rose—"

"Yes—Stan-ton. . . . You know—the greatest actress the American cinema can claim. . . . She is assembling a company to go to Rome to produce The Marble Faun. . . . Shall I write it?" he asked craftily.

"No—no!" Mal exclaimed and for a moment again looked sick. "Let me—The Marble—"

"Faun," said Grimwold. "F-a-u-n—"

"Yes," Mal whispered in a blaze of joy painful to watch.

"Well, she—Rose Stanton—wants a dark, superbly eerie—eerie is the word—leading man. She has been hunting everywhere with no success. The actor she'd engaged broke his leg on the boat coming over. . . . I intimated I had the very fellow for her. She was greatly taken with your photographic possibilities when she saw your portrait there on my desk. . . . I told her all about you, Mal. What I told her only added to her interest. I'm to let her and her director know tomorrow if there is any use for them to meet you—"

Mal staggered to his feet and leaned, trembling, against the table.

"Grimmy—do you know what's been happening? I've understood almost every word you've said. . . . Understood you, I tell you . . . with little effort—"

"Yes," Grimwold whispered.

"Think what this means! To understand. I can hardly believe it! I—"

"Mal, you understood months ago, but stubbornly refused to realize it. . . . There! Say nothing about that. Just let me go on doing for you. . . . Come! Come! This is no time to go to pieces. . . . Listen—for I haven't finished. This cinema angle is important. It is developing—why, who knows, some day they may make it talk! It certainly has a future, and great artistic and financial possibilities—perhaps for both of us. Now then, will you meet these people tomorrow?"

Agrees to Try.

"Meet?" . . . Yes, I'll meet them. If they want me. I'll give it a try—for your sake, Grimmy. And for my own so that I—I can pay—her off to divorce me." Mal still refused to speak Zelda's name.

Grimwold watched him, troubled. Here was one of Mal's difficulties he couldn't cope with. He was pretty thoroughly convinced that if money ever began to roll in, Mrs. Mallard would see fit to remain a legally wedded wife.

But Mal didn't notice the troubled look on Grimwold's face. He was walking, rather drunkenly to be sure, up and down the room, his voice choked with triumph.

"I've got it licked, Grimmy! I've won a victory. Or rather, you have, I swear. I'll make you proud of me. I'll make all your trouble over me worthwhile • • • I've got the confidence now. • • • Confidence. • • • I know I can do it. • • • I'll go on with these lessons. I see how I'll improve and improve with practice. I'll get so diabolically skillful, I'll confound the world that has confounded me. I'll be its eighth wonder. • • • I'll——"

Grimwold turned a stooped shoulder upon his godson's transports. Taking a neatly folded handkerchief from his left breast pocket, he furtively dabbed at his eyes.

• • • •

Outwardly, it was like all the other New Years of the past 14 years except that its arrival, 24 hours hence, was awaited by the world with such desperate hope.

As usual, Miss Pamella Wyeth faced the new year alone from her villa in the Sierra Madre hills above Pasadena. With her colors flying, she attempted to hide behind this gallant display the fear and heaviness of the heart.

Alone in a bungalow at the Excelsior Hotel, Mr. Roger Mallard, quite forgetful of Miss Wyeth's existence, was also whipping up his courage to bear his own heavy weight of sorrow.

Young David Barkley, however, was troubled by neither sorrow nor efforts to be courageous. He was merely temporarily inconvenienced by having to make a decision—whether to go on a major or minor bat for the evening.

Japan, Britain Stand on Navies May Start Race

U. S., England Will Follow Nippon's Treaty Bolt, Observers Believe.

By the Associated Press.

Two new international naval developments yesterday pointed to the possibility of a naval race after the expiration of the London limitation treaty this year.

Japanese Ambassador Hirosi Saito formally notified Secretary Hull of his government's intention to retain 15,598 tons of submarines and 11,059 tons of destroyers above present treaty limits.

Only a few hours earlier, Secretary Hull had announced that the United States would be "reluctantly obliged" to follow Great Britain in keeping in service 40,000 tons of destroyers which would be scrapped under the treaty.

Obscured for the moment by an academic discussion over whether the Japanese procedure was technically correct was the answer to the question: Will the United States, and Great Britain as well, insist upon matching Japan submarine for submarine?

Unofficial but responsible quarters generally believed they would. Whether this would set the stage for the beginning of a naval building race at the expiration this year of the London Limitation Treaty none would venture to predict.

"Escalator Clause."

The Japanese move was necessitated, it was explained, by the earlier action of Great Britain in invoking the London treaty's "escalator clause" to retain 40,000 tons of destroyers which she otherwise would have been compelled to scrap before January 1, 1937.

Britain gave as reason for the step the new submarine and destroyer construction of France and Italy, which are not parties to the treaty.

Under the 5—5—3 ratio, the British action would have entitled Japan to retain 28,000 tons of destroyers, but the Nipponese government explained that it did not possess sufficient excess tonnage in these ships to meet the British increase and that it intended to make up the difference in submarines.

Thereby, it raised the question now puzzling both London and Washington officials as to whether Japan is privileged under the treaty to take such action without formally invoking the "escalator clause" with respect to submarines.

This article, also known as the "escape clause," permits any signatory to the treaty to disregard the limitation provisions if it believes its national security to be affected by new construction of nonsignatories.

Similar Right.

In turn, it gives the other parties to the treaty the right to take similar acion. Japan, it was said, is completely free to increase its destroyer tonnage as a result of the British move. Some contended, however, that the treaty does not permit it to apply the provision to vessels of a different category.

State Department officials withheld comment on Tokyo's note, but well-informed observers predicted the procedure—if not also a decision as to whether the Japanese submarine move would be matched—likely will be the subject of consultations between Washington and London.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Washington Summer Concerts Association presents its twentieth concert at the Potomac Watergate with Nikolai Sokolov as guest conductor. Program: Overture to "Euryanthe" (Weber), Symphony No. 2 in D major (Brahms), "La Procession Nocturne" (Rabaud), Suite from "Carmen" (Bizet), "Indian War Dance" (Skilton).

One regrets to report that the attendance last night indicated the usual mid-week ebb in the fluctuating tide of interest for which no laws have yet been discovered by any observer. Possibly the absentees believed that postponement saps some virtue from a concert, and that the music which was rained off on Wednesday would have suffered a dilution. Their error was manifest in the spirited mood of the orchestra, and particularly in Dr. Sokolov's sympathetic reading of Brahms' sunniest and most genial symphony.

Even before that, there was a stirring performance of Weber's chivalric overture to "Euryanthe," that old fashioned drama so aptly described on the title page as "a grand heroic-romantic opera." The vogue of Weber may never come back in noticeable strength but there is no denying that he had a knack in embuing melodrama with a peculiar glow of the uncanny. Amid the pomp of the overture, the short mysterious largo still has the power to evoke a shiver of dread.

In his second symphony, Brahms took the world into his confidence to a greater extent that in any other of his major orchestral works. Therein he revealed, to those who choose to understand, that his bluff and sometimes formidable manner was a convenient mask for a tender heart and a spirit capable of the deepest joy. He laid aside for the moment his cryptic grammar and his crabbed phrases to speak in a forthright and expansive eloquence.

This is no symphony of a misanthrope, but a work suffused with optimism and a faith in human perfectability. It is eupeptic and radiant with vigor, sturdy and dominant, sincere in its satisfaction with life. The serious Brahms here forgets himself in sheer light-heartedness.

It was pleasant to hear again Henri Rabaud's "Nocturnal Procession," one of the few compositions on the Faust theme that does not derive from Goethe. Rabaud has a skilled hand in scoring and a color sense that relates him closely to the best impressionists.

On The Air Today

Thursday, the 17th, will not be just another day of broadcasting so far as the Columbia net is concerned.

First, it is the eve of the network's ninth anniversary. Further, it marks the first broadcast of Maj. Bowes and his alleged amateur show under Columbia auspices. And last but not least, Columbia seizes the occasion to dedicate its new Radio Theater, on Broadway.

Followers of Maj. Bowes will make particular note of the date. Beginning then, the Bowes programs will be heard Thursday nights at 8, instead of Sunday nights at 7, as at present. And, of course, the new Washington station will be WJSV, replacing WRC.

• • • •

Columbia's new Radio Theater is at Fifty-third street and Broadway—the one-time Hammerstein. Considerable work has been done to make it adaptable to broadcasting. For example, to accommodate the Bowes show the stage is extended far out into the auditorium to permit spectators full participation. Bowes' solicited telephone calls will be received right in the theater, operators being seated just below the stage at long tables.

Provision also has been made for the major's offices, requiring two floors over the front portion of the building. The stage "floats" on a cushion of sound-isolating material.

• • • •

Columbia has seen the broadcasting industry undergo some intriguing changes since that day in 1927 when 16 stations, all east of the Mississippi, carried the first program of the new entrant into network broadcasting. Only 10 hours of service each week was provided the affiliated stations in those early days.

Today 101 stations are affiliated with C. B. S. Service is provided 18 hours daily. The most notable change, however, is in the interest of the public in attending broadcasts. In 1935, more than 638,000 persons visited Columbia's three studio-theaters. The new Radio Theater is an addition to such facilities.

• • • •

These are days to keep your eye on the radio time table and follow the program notes carefully. Many of your favorite programs, as is the case with Bowes, are shifting about these September days—and many new programs are being inaugurated and still others returning after the summer vacations.

"Death Valley Days," a program usually associated with Thursdays in listeners' minds, shifts this week, beginning tonight, to Fridays at 7:30 WMAL. Corinna Mura, singing-guitarist, is a special guest artist for the occasion.

"Singin' Sam" returns to the air tonight—but on an NBC net instead of his familiar spot at WJSV. Sam is to be presented Fridays and Mondays weekly. (Fridays, at 7:15, WMAL.) His programs originate at WLW, Cincinnati.

Red Grange, the "galloping ghost" of football's Big Ten, begins a new series of grid commentating and analysis, WRC, at 9:30, and will be heard each Friday at the same time. He will size up the collegiate situation (Saturday games) this fall.

And a very old friend to so many listeners, "The First Nighter," returns to WRC tonight at 9, with Don Ameche back in the cast. Tonight's play is "Transatlantic Zeppelin," a mystery drama dealing with a munitions ring. Barbara Luddy is chief in the supporting cast.

Other features today:

Turnabout—Mary Mason guests at WOR for Martha Deane, and Mary Turner, director of the Home Service Department of Pepco, takes over the WRC "Home Forum," WRC, at 1:30.

Shirley's Mama—Elza Schallert interviews Shirley Temple's mother on "One Mother to Another," WMAL, at 9:30.

Know Your Opponents.

The best bids and plays at contract cannot be appraised on a purely academic basis, apart from their personal or psychological raison d'etre. For, in the last analysis, a splendid play against one type of player might be a rotten play against a different type, and vice versa. This fact accounts for the almost infinite variety of knowledge that must be gained by players who aspire to the topmost rung of the ladder. Consider declarer's problem in the following hand:

South, dealer.

♠ 10 2
♥ 8 3 2
♦ 5 4 3

WEST
♥ K J 9
♦ 10 9 8 7
♣ Q 7 4 3

EAST
♠ J 8 4
♥ Q 10 7 4

SOUTH
♠ A K Q 9 6 5
♥ A 6 5
♦ A K Q J
♣ None

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 spades	Pass	3 clubs	Pass
3 spades	Pass	3 no trump	Pass
4 diams.	Pass	4 spades	Pass
6 spades	Pass	Pass	Pass

Declarer was fortunate in that West opened the ten of diamonds instead of a heart, which would have nipped the slam contract in the bud. (Obviously West could not be criticized for failing to lead from the K J 9 of hearts.)

But when dummy appeared declarer had a slight sinking sensation. How to use those beautiful club tricks? How to avoid losing two hearts?

There was only one way, or rather one way that really had two bypaths. Declarer immediately led the nine of trumps. When the jack failed to go up from West's hand dummy played low, and East, with somewhat of a stupefied expression on his face at his "good fortune," pounced on the trick with his jack. Declarer breathed a loud sigh of relief, won the diamond return, entered dummy with the ten of trumps, and ditched his losing hearts on the A K of clubs. He then claimed the rest.

I was kibitzing the play, and whispered to the declarer: "Would you have played exactly the same way against any defenders?"

He whispered back. "Of course not! You and I know that an expert in East's position would have sensed what I was doing—establishing dummy's spade ten for an entry—and would have refused to win my nine lead. He would have seen through my dodge and immediately concluded that there was some darn good reason for any such open-handedness on my part as to present him with a jack that must be subject to capture. Therefore he simply would let me hold the nine spot, sacrificing his jack to a good cause. If I'd thought that East was an expert I would not even have tried to fool him. Then my only hope would be to play West for the jack of trumps. If he had it the ten would be a sure entry, either on the first or the second round. It was simply a case of guessing who had the jack and when West failed to put it up, second hand, I felt reasonably sure he didn't have it."

"One hundred per cent!" I murmured.

Ambers Wins Lightweight Title From Canzoneri by Decision

Judges Give Unanimous Verdict

18,000 See Ex-Sparring Mate Beat Conqueror in Return Bout.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 3.—Tony Canzoneri, battle-scarred little idol of metropolitan fistic fans, lost the world lightweight championship tonight to his one-time sparring partner, Lou Ambers, of Herkimer, N. Y., in a 15-round match witnessed by a near-capacity crowd of 18,026 fans in Madison Square Garden. Ambers, scaling 134¼, gained a decisive victory over the titleholder, who scaled 135.

Unanimous Verdict.

Reversing the outcome of their title fight a year ago, the light-hitting but aggressive "Herkimer Hurricane" carried the fight to Canzoneri from the outset, turned back two spirited rallies by the titleholder, and won by a wide margin on points in a match that produced no knockdowns and few fireworks.

Ambers, scaling the lightweight heights at the age of 22 with a victory over the fighter who taught him most of the tricks of the fistic game, was given the unanimous verdict by Referee Arthur Donovan and the two judges, Charley Lynch and George Kelly.

On the Associated Press score card, Ambers won nine rounds, including the last three. Canzoneri was credited with five while one, the twelfth, was rated even.

Crowley Claims Fowl.

Ambers victory topped off a double championship program, the first half of which resulted in a controversial knockout victory for Mike Belloise, New York's featherweight championship claimant, over Dave Crowley, British titleholder in the 126-pound division.

Crowley was counted out in 2:52 of the ninth round after toppling to the floor, clutching his groin and claiming he had been fouled by a left uppercut that Referee Arthur Donovan insisted landed in fair territory. The little Briton had been saved by the bell in the eighth after being flattened by a hard right to the chin, with only four seconds to go.

Canzoneri Is Slow.

Canzoneri, ring worn at the age of 27, was slow and unimpressive from start to finish, except for a few widely separated flashes of the fighting form that carried him to a decisive triumph over Ambers a year ago. Whether it was due to fistic age or the humidity which made the Garden seem like a Turkish bath, the champion lacked anything resembling his usual punching skill.

Rodolfo (Baby) Casanova, Mexican champion in three classes, scored a sensational technical knockout victory over Petey Hayes, New York featherweight, in the fourth round of a ten-round match. Casanova floored Hayes twice in the first round with vicious lefts for six and nine counts. The bout was stopped with only two seconds to go in the fourth as Hayes reeled helplessly under the Mexican's two-fisted attack.

Al Treder Is Father Of 4½-Pound Girl

Al Treder, Manor Club professional, who will help run off the District Amateur championship for the next three days at his home course, was handing out cigars and mint juleps yesterday.

Al became the proud papa of a 4½-pound baby girl. The babe, who hasn't been named yet, was born at Providence Hospital.

Joe Kuhel Scores From Second on Passed Ball

Mrs. Meckley Bows, 3-2, to Patty Berg

By the Associated Press.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Sept. 3.—Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, youngest member of America's Curtis Cup golfing team, stroked her way into the finals today of the Mason-Dixon Women's Tournament and tomorrow will battle it out with Virginia Guilfoil, of Syracuse, N. Y., for the championship.

The 18-year-old red-haired Middle Western star had a real fight on her hands before she eliminated Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, of Washington, 3 and 2, in a see-saw match under drab skies while a gallery of 500 looked on.

Miss Guilfoil fought an uphill game to put the defending champion, Jean Bauer, of Providence, R. I., out of the running, 1 up, on the nineteenth hole. The match was all Jean's up to the fifteenth hole, but she lost out because of the sterling putting of her opponent, climaxed by a birdie that squared the match on the eighteenth hole.

Final Today.

The finalists, survivors of a field of 80, will play a 36-hole match tomorrow for the title.

Mrs. Meckley forced Miss Berg, fresh from three easy victories in the previous rounds, to put on the pressure to win. She got some help through Miss Berg's off-form putting and bad chip shots.

The Washington player three-putted the first hole and lost it, then took the second and third, lost the fourth, halved the fifth, won the long sixth and halved the seventh and eighth to become one up going into the ninth.

Patty one-putted the ninth for a four, while Mrs. Meckley took a five, making the match even at the turn. Both were out in 41.

Mrs. Meckley got into the rough with her tee shot on the tenth and was short with her second, taking a 5, while Miss Berg had a 4. On the eleventh, Mrs. Meckley found a trap, but holed a 12-foot putt for a 4 to square the match.

On the long 537-yard par 5 twelfth hole, Patty took a 5 and Mrs. Meckley a 6. They halved the thirteenth in 5s. On the fourteenth, Patty was on in 2 and made the hole in 4, while Mrs. Meckley found a trap and took a 5, going 2 down. On the short fifteenth, both were on the green in two putts for a halve in 3s.

The match ended on the lake hole, No. 16. Both shot over the water, but Mrs. Meckley was short in 2, while Miss Berg found the green in 2 for a par 4. Mrs. Meckley took a 5, making the match 3 up and 2 to go.

Crowe, D. C. Entry, Fires World Mark In Ohio Matches

By the Associated Press.

Camp Perry, Ohio, Sept. 3.—Miss Flossie Anson, of Akron, Ohio, shared the limelight in the national rifle matches today with Henry P. Crowe, United States Marine gunner, Washington, D. C., who fired a new unofficial world record in the Wimbledon Cup match.

Shooting in the Lyman Trophy two-man team match, a small bore event, Miss Anson registered 400 points over the 50 and 100-yard course for a record woman's score and a score equalled by only 16 men in the history of the match.

Her shooting partner was John Campbell, also of Akron. They scored a team total of 793. Winners have not yet been announced.

Crowe topped 1,571 competitors in firing his record score of 100 points and 19 V's over the 1,000-yard range.

Sergt. Roy R. Wilson, Twenty-ninth Infantry, Fort Benning, Ga., was second with 100 and 18 V's, and Sergt. Edward V. Seeser, U. S. Marines, Washington, D. C., third with 100 and 15 V's.

Mungo Defeats Lee, of Cubs, 1-0, in 10th

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 3.—With the aid of Frenchy Bordagaray's bat, Van Mungo topped Bill Lee in a ten-inning pitchers' battle today, hurling the Brooklyn Dodgers to a 1-0 victory over the Cubs.

Bordagaray, who had a double and two singles for the day's heavy-hitting honors, banged out this third hit of the game with a mate on second base in the extra frame to drive in the only run and give Mungo his fourteenth pitching victory. For Lee it was the eleventh defeat, compared to 14 wins for the season.

Favorites Win In Forest Hills Net Play

By the United Press.

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 3.—Opening play in the combined men's and women's national tennis championships today emphasized the difficulty awaiting anyone who hopes to stop Frederick J. Perry, of England, and Helen Hull Jacobs, of Berkeley, Calif., short of the titles in their respective divisions. Both are heavy favorites to triumph in the ten-day tournament.

Perry conquered Alfred Jarvis, 6-foot 4-inch former boys' champion from Tenafly, N. J., 6—0, 6—0, 6—2, in the first round of the men's singles. A crowd of 4,000 witnessed the match.

Miss Jacobs routed Esther Edwards, husky Bridgeport, Conn., girl, 6—0, 6—0, in their first-round match.

Of Washington's three entrants in the men's tournament, only 19-year-old Gilbert Hunt was able to survive the first round. Holder of the Washington Post Challenge Bowl, emblematic of the Middle Atlantic championship, Hunt advanced at the expense of Milton Ruehl, champion of Milwaukee, Wis., 6—3, 6—4, 10—8. Ruehl is ranked third behind Frank Parker, Cliff Sutter and John McDiarmid in the Western Association ratings.

Barney Welsh, of Rockville, District of Columbia champion, expired at the hands of J. Gilbert Hall, of South Orange, N. J., 6—4, 3—6, 10—8, 6—4. Hall, eighth ranking player of the country, passed the crisis of his match in the third set when he overhauled the hard-hitting Marylander to win the 18-game chapter and then fought him off in the fourth set.

Hugh Lynch, one of the ranking players of the District, lost a five-set struggle to young Charlie Mattman, of New York, 4—6, 7—5, 6—4, 4—6, 6—0. The younger player was in superior physical shape and had a walk-away in the final set when Lynch appeared to tire rapidly. Mattman, incidentally, shares the National Junior Indoor doubles championship with Hunt.

Ehrlich Host To Trenton 'Softies'

Abe Rosenfield, hurling ace of the Agriculture Aggies, who recently was signed by the District champion Ehrlich Poultry Co. softball team, will pitch tonight when the Ehrlichs play host to the Trenton Democratic Club, of Baltimore, at Griffith Stadium at 8:30 o'clock.

Opposed to Rosenfield will be Jake Friedman, Trenton ace, who defeated Rosenfield and the Aggies by a one-run margin earlier in the season.

Originally announcing Bunker Hill as their starting selection, the Poultrymen switched to Rosenfield in a surprise move last night, the bespectacled Agriculture ace asking for the shot that has been assigned him.

The Ehrlichs and Trentons made softball history in Baltimore last Sunday, when they dueled 18 innings, Trentons shading the locals, 1 to 0.

Nats Set Back Tigers, 3-1; Tie for 4th

Appleton Yields Only 6 Hits, Downs Bridges in Great Duel.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

Pete Appleton delivered what is known as a very sweetly pitched ball game yesterday and the Nats climbed back into the first division over the frustrated forms of the Detroit Tigers.

He gave up six hits to the Tigers in winning a 3-1 pitching duel from Tommy Bridges, but in the last six innings Appleton was performing like a living composite of Christy Mathewson, Three-Fingered Brown and Walter Johnson.

After the Tigers came up with their lone run of the afternoon in the third inning, Mr. Appleton was superb as he nursed a 2-run lead into the finish. Only one hit did he surrender to the Tigers in those last six innings, only one Tiger did he permit on base. Twenty-two of the last 23 batters he faced went out in order.

Neither was there anything particularly inviting about the pitching that Mr. Bridges was serving up. The Nats, had they but known it, were through for the day as far as scoring was concerned after they jammed three runs across the plate in the first inning. And one of those tallies was luck-anointed.

Bridges Airtight After First.

For eight consecutive innings after that first, Bridges shut the Nats out, only to be frustrated by the Tigers' futility against Appleton.

The effects of the Nats' victory were very salubrious, indeed. It enabled them to hunch into a fourth-place tie with the White Sox, who were dividing a doubleheader at Boston, to reduce to one game the distance that separates them from the third-place Tigers and to 2½ games the margin between fourth and second place.

Five of their six hits off Appleton the Tigers accumulated in the first three innings, but singles by Burns and Gehringer netted 'em nothing in the first when Stone threw Burns out at second when he attempted to stretch his hit.

Before Bridges could get a man out in the Nats' first inning, he found the bases full. Ben Chapman drew the first of his three walks, Buddy Lewis singled to center, and Joe Kuhel beat out a bunt back to the box. In this crisis, Stone lashed a deep fly to Simmons and Chapman scored from third as Lewis moved to third.

Just when it appeared that the Nats would salvage only one run out of the proceedings, a couple of more clattered across the plate. As Freddie Sington struck out amid the groans of the fans, Lewis and Kuhel pulled a double steal on the pitch, with Lewis scoring. Run No. three by the Nats was a pure gift, with Kuhel scoring all the way from second when a passed ball eluded the mitt of Catcher Glenn Myatt.

The Tigers finally got around to scoring against Appleton in the third when Bridges drew a walk and dashed home on singles by Walker and Burns, but after that Appleton saw to it that nothing much happened.

ing the twenty-seventh hole one down to the veteran English player. Bentley even had George one down and 2 to play, but nervously three-putted the thirty-fifth hole to lose it and allow Dunlap to get a halved match and give the United States its victory of whitewash.

Johnny Fischer, of Cincinnati, on the sidelines during the foursome play that America won 2 to 0, shot the finest golf of the day to crush Cecil Ewing, long-hitting Irishman, 8 and 7. Johnny, deadly with his irons from the open and behind trees, scored a 74 in the morning and then raced out with a 34, one under par, to raise his lead to 8 up and 9 to go. He matched par for par on the next two holes to win handily. Over the 29 holes he travelled, Johnny was but three over par—a real achievement at Pine Valley.

Charley Yates, the crooning Atlantan, also was only three over par but was aided with a few gives by his faltering foe, J. Morton Dykes, Scott putting genius, whom he beat 8 and 7.

Okay, Pete

Lack of Uniform Keeps Hogan on Bench

Yale Grid Broadcasts May Become Epidemic

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 3.—Yale's newly adopted policy to commercialize radio broadcasts of home football games may catch like wildfire among other Eastern colleges before the rapidly approaching 1936 intercollegiate gridiron season gets underway.

That was the forecast today, 24 hours after it was announced the New Haven Blues had sold broadcasting rights to commercial sponsors through metropolitan and New England stations for the reported sum of $20,000.

At the same time it was announced by John Shepard 3d, president of the Yankee Network System with headquarters in Boston, that agreements had been reached to furnish Boston College and Brown with commercial sponsors, while official spokesmen for Harvard, Pennsylvania and Fordham looked with favor upon the idea.

Yale decided to "cash in" so as to give persons who can't go to the games in the cavernous concrete bowl a chance to hear them, plus the attractive opportunity "to get some revenue at the same time," said Harold F. Woodcock, business manager of the Yale Athletic Association.

Bill Bingham, graduate manager of Harvard, who returned today from Berlin, where he was manager of the American Olympic track and field team, indicated the Crimson is in a receptive mood for offers.

"I don't think it's inconsistent," said Bingham. "I rather think it's a dignified practice just like selling advertising for programs. I have heard several suggestions along that line, but have yet to see anything on the dotted line."

Hogan Will Catch For Nats Today

Shanty Hogan, Washington's newly acquired catcher, will be unveiled at Griffith Stadium this afternoon when the Nats engage the Athletics in a Ladies' Day game.

Forced to view the game from the stands yesterday because no uniform could be found to fit his huge bulk, Hogan will be suitably attired in a specially tailored uniform to be rushed from Baltimore this morning.

Buck Newsom will take the mound against the Athletics in the first of a three-game series which presents the Nats the opportunity to climb into third place.

Hubbell Beats Dizzy Dean And Cards

Giants' Hurler Wins Own Game at Bat; 22,000 Watch 2-1 Thriller.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Sept. 3.—The New York Giants wound up their most successful Western invasion in years today with a 2-to-1 victory over the Cardinals in a pitching thriller that saw Carl Hubbell best Dizzy Dean, both from the mound and at bat.

Aided by the stickwork of Gus Mancuso and Dick Bartell, who had a big hand in both New York runs, the lean portsider stopped the gas house gang with four hits to boost the Giants' National League lead to four full games as they returned to the Polo Grounds.

It was the screwball artist's eleventh straight victory and his twenty-first of the season, and gave the Giants a record of 10 triumphs in 13 starts since they left their home lot.

Dean held the New Yorkers to eight hits, but that wasn't good enough, leaving him with 9 defeats and 22 wins for the season.

Although Mancuso with three singles, and Bartell with a double and a triple, were the batting big guns for the Giants, it was Hubbell who won his own ball game in the ninth.

Mancuso had singled to right for his third hit of the game. Bartell advanced him to third with a two-bagger inside the third-base line. Bill Terry rushed Burgess Whitehead into the game to run for the slow catcher, and Hubbell promptly sent him home with a fly to Pepper Martin in short right-center, for the winning run.

With both pitchers bearing down before the crowd of more than 22,000 who turned out for the important clash, the batters found the going tough.

Rudy Dusek Dunks Ole Anderson

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Ole Anderson, of Sweden, Iowa, Wisconsin and points West, gave a good exhibition of contortionism last night at Griffith Stadium, and all he got for his efforts was a punch in the neck, a kick in the pants and another failure on his report card.

The kick in the pants, etc., etc., was administered by righteous Rudy Dusek, who had good license to administer same inasmuch as he happens to be the Swede's boss, and even bosses can take only so much from their employes. Rudy buried Anderson in the carpet after 31½ minutes of action, in which the head man was subjected to some startling indignities by his night watchman.

Swede did all right by himself for the first 30 minutes and the crowd, howling with glee at the sight of a boss being bounced around by a hired hand, half suspected an upset to be in the making. But the only upset of any consequence occurred in the last half minute of the match when Boss Dusek lifted employe Anderson over his head and started driving tacks with him. Unfortunately, for the hired help, Referee Benny Bortnick finally managed to count up to three at this juncture and capital had triumphed over labor.

As noted above, the Swede did all right for a while extricating himself from several embarrassing situations by various limb-bending feats. He made himself look like a hump-backed pretzel, Mahatma Ghandi, Sinbad the Sailor, and a couple of babies sucking their big toes. It was great stuff, but didn't win the match.

Swede applied a scissors to Rudy's tummy midway in the proceedings, but after holding it about three minutes, committed the near-fatal tactical error of resting on his back and was almost counted out. On another occasion he had both bare feet wrapped around the boss' neck in an illegal hold and the referee had to tickle the bottom of his feet to break it.

In the preliminaries Floyd Marshall and Abe Yourist went 30 minutes to a draw; Cliff Olsen tossed Henri Piers with a head scissors in 14 minutes; Abe Coleman dumped Tex Morgan in 13 minutes with a drop-kick, and Ed Meske disposed of Ralph Garibaldi in the same time with an armlock.

Sophisticated Overcomes Bad Breaks to Take Marlboro Purse

Favorites Win 4 of First 5 Events

Double Shrinks to $11 in Day of Very Small Mutuel Prices.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Marlboro, Md., Sept. 3.—Sophisticated, a sprightly daughter of Sting, won today's feature race, the hard way. Finding more obstacles than there are in a game of monopoly, the filly came through with a head decision, which was as effective as five lengths at the pay-off windows. To begin with, Sophisticated went into the air at the break to resemble a park statue. Then she was bumped while attempting to reach contention. As if she had not had her share of poor racing luck, she was forced wide at two turns. When she finally gained the clear, Our Ship was sailing along some four lengths in front. Even then, Sophisticated was to have none the best of it. She had to go to the outside of the flying leader for the final drive. However, she packed the necessary punch.

Jockey Coffman plied a convincing whip that kept her in a running mood and slowly, but surely she cut down the leader to stick her head out in front to the shrieks of her backers.

When the echo of the cheers had died away, Sophisticated backers went to the betting ring to collect $4.30. She was the fourth favorite to win in the five races up to that point.

A crowd of 6,000, the usual turnout, witnessed the day's sport. Although the skies sagged, rain was confined to a slight sprinkle that failed to send the regulars to cover. The track remained fast and the running times were good.

The daily double provided only "peanut" money. A pair of heavily played choices teamed to bring a pay-off of $11.70.

The feature race was named the Mayor Howard W. Jackson Purse and the Baltimore head man was on hand to see the fun.

Eddie Smith, the Washington jockey, and Nimule, a veteran gelding, brought joy to the favorite players in the first race by leading Channing home by three parts of a length. Rock Spray was third in the field of eight. Nimule had the lead most of the way and paid $4.60. The start of the race was a bloomer and Falmouth Belle and Miss Patches virtually were left.

The Bond family added to its successes hereabouts in the second race. The running was done by Timber Phantom and the expert guiding was the work of Sammy Palumbo. Beaten a neck was Flying Dervish, with Mont Daisy third. Palumbo chose to take Timber Phantom through on the rail entering the stretch and he gained the ground that brought the victory. The shortest win mutuel of the meeting resulted, with Timber Phantom paying $3.60.

Nature's Dream walked the chalk mark in the role of a favorite in the third race to pay a $4.40 mutuel. Backers of the filly would have given little for her chances entering the stretch for Ado had come from far back to take the lead. However, Synder rallied the filly and she came again to wear down Ado to win by half a length. Runanstay was a charging third.

Jockey Palumbo rode his second winner of the day in the fourth race, bringing Sea Finn home by a length at a $7 mutuel. Scotty Don had a like margin over Lady Buck for the place.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NIMULE, $4.60, $2.80, $2.50; CHANNING, $3.10, $2.40; ROCK SPRAY, $3.10.

NIMULE, off in the first flight, saved ground while closest to the early pace, took command and shook off late challenges of CHANNING. The latter, away well, raced on the outside of the winner for the last three furlongs, but was tiring slowly in the stretch. ROCK SPRAY lacked early speed, dropped back and gained gradually thereafter. FASHION QUEEN went forwardly, but faltered in the last furlong. MERSAN beat the gate, but could not keep up. MISS PATCHES and FALMOUTH BELLE had no chance with the start.

TIMBER PHANTOM, allowed to settle into best stride, gained sharply leaving the backstretch, came through on the rail to take command and, under energetic handling, lasted. FLYING DERVISH went up on the outside to engage DARLING PAT, lost ground entering the stretch and was gradually wearing down the winner. MONT DAISY dropped back soon after the start, gained slowly thereafter while racing wide. DARLING PAT dropped out of it after three furlongs. ROYAL FOLLY had early speed, as did BEAU FRERE.

THIRD RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $300; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:18. Off at 3:20. Winner, A. W. Waters' br. or blk. f. NATURE'S DREAM ran MISS JOYOUS into defeat to take command, surrendered the lead to ADO entering the stretch and then came again in the middle of the track to win going away. ADO, far back at the beginning, gained with a rush on the backstretch, saved ground to go to the front, but Hilley appeared to ride overconfidently. RUNANSTAY, forwardly placed from the start, closed willingly. ROSEMARIE B. made up some ground in the late stages. CLIFTON'S NELL came well at the end. MISS JOYOUS had good early speed.

FOURTH RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $300; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:39. Off at 4:00. Winner, Mrs. L. Seay's b. f. SEA FINN, within striking distance of the leaders from the start, gradually wore down LADY BUCK and held SCOTTY DON safe in the closing drive. SCOTTY DON, unable to get to the front at the beginning, saved ground in the late stages and closed with a rush. LADY BUCK ran LET'S PLAY into defeat, but could not resist the other two. LADY WINDSOR could not threaten at any stage. LET'S PLAY quit.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. The Mayor Howard W. Jackson. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:27. Off at 4:30. SOPHISTICATED went in the air at the break, was carried wide at two early turns, gained sharply when put to drive and wore down OUR SHIP in the concluding strides under good handling. OUR SHIP ran TAMBOV into defeat to take command, opened a gap, but could not resist the winner. TAMBOV went to the front at once, but tired after surrendering the lead. BERRY PATCH chased the early pace and faltered. WITTEKIND dropped back after moving up the second time around. The others were outrun.

MARGE, steadied along until reaching the backstretch, went up when put to drive, was carried wide by GAY LASS entering the stretch and came with good speed when clear and wore down GAY LASS to win going away. GAY LASS, forwardly placed from the start, disposed of KEYED UP after a half, but could not match the winner. KEYED UP was sent to the front under hustling tactics and tired. PETEE LAD closed well after a rough trip. HOGARTY pressed the early pace.

Peacock Heads Field of 55 in Qualifying Round for D. C. Title

Titlist Is Held Favorite to Triumph

Field Is Biggest in Past 10 Years; Quinter and Balestri Lead Off.

By Dave Herman.

The largest field in the last 10 years—55 golfers—will toe the mark this afternoon in the 18-hole qualifying round of the District championship at Manor Club's course, with Roger Peacock, of Congressional, favored to retain his laurels.

At approximately 1 p. m. Ralph Quinter, jr., of Chevy Chase; C. C. Trautner, of Indian Spring, and Joe Balestri, of Beaver Dam, will let fire with their tee shots to inaugurate the 1936 amateur show.

Among the post entries received yesterday by Dr. W. C. Barr, secretary of the District Golf Association, was one from Martin F. McCarthy, of Columbia, thrice a contestant in the national amateur championship.

Shorey Is Entered.

Another late entry was John C. Shorey, of Kenwood, the former "boy wonder" of District golf, now a full-fledged school teacher in Staunton, Va. Shorey, semifinalist last year at Washington Golf and Country Club, came to town for the express purpose of playing in the championship. He went out and played 18 holes alone, hitting two and three balls on each shot. Shorey formerly was a member at Manor.

Other additional starters were Jack Palmer, of Beaver Dam; J. H. Maroney and Billy Rochelle, of Indian Springs; George F. Miller and R. T. Welsh, of Columbia.

Peacock wasn't out for a practice round yesterday, telling his friends he was quite satisfied with the way he has been hitting the ball. Who wouldn't be? Why, Roger was only third among a coast-to-coast field of more than 1,000 in the recent National amateur qualifying trials. He had 140 in the 36-hole test at Columbia.

Brownell Has Low Score.

A goodly number of golfers had a final tune-up round at Manor, which played rather heavy after several days of rain. This par 70 course will stretch out close to 6,200 yards for today's qualifying round.

Bobby Brownell, 17-year-old District junior champion, who is a member at Manor, drilled out a 35-38—73 for the lowest of the practice scores. Bernie Hallock, Kenwood's John Boles, shot a 75 after playing the incoming nine in an even par 35. Jack Palmer and his Beaver Dam pal, Johnny Miller, did 75's, while Reid Diggs, of Kenwood, shot a 76 after turning in 36.

Sixteen will qualify for the championship flight, and those who fail will be bracketed in two other flights. When match play starts tomorrow, stymies will not prevail. Scores of 77 are expected to qualify for the top flight.

Reds Defeat Bees Twice for 7 in Row

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, Sept. 3.—The Reds ran their winning streak to seven games today with a double-header victory over Boston's Bees, 3 to 0 and 6 to 4.

Gene Schott, the Reds' starting pitcher in the first game, held the Bees to three hits until a line-drive from Wally Berger's bat hit him in the hand and forced him to retire. Derringer permitted only two hits the rest of the game. He allowed no hits in the two innings he worked in the second game.

Red Sox Divide 2 Games With White Sox

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Sept. 3.—Tom Yawkey's Red Sox divided a double-header with the Chicago White Sox today, winning the second game, 5-0, behind the seven-hit pitching of Johnny Marcum after Wes Ferrell dropped a pitchers' battle with John Whitehead, 3-2.

A four-run rally in the eighth inning of the second game knocked "Sugar" Cain out of the box and made certain Marcum's ninth victory of the season.

The rally was produced by four hits, including a triple by Jimmy Foxx and doubles by Werber and Kroner.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Justified now in the eyes of skeptics who for three years greeted as assorted tommyrot, fol-de-rol and flap-doodle his furious tom-tom beating in the cause of Tuffy Leemans is little John Kingsbury Espey, George Washington University's minister of propaganda and public enlightenment.

POVICH.

Out there on Soldiers Field the other evening against the national professional champions, George Washington's Tuffy was running not only for the College All-Stars—but for Jack Espey. It was Espey who, since Tuffy first set foot on Griffith Stadium in 1933, had been wildly attempting to attract the attention of the Nation's critics to the fact that here was a swell fooball player.

No, not just a swell football player, but a great football player—a super star whose misfortune it was to be cast with a college that didn't rate the Nation's Sunday morning headlines. Nightly, in his downtown office, the diminutive Espey was occupied until the wee small hours attempting to sell Tuffy Leemans to the football critics in the North, the East and the Midwest.

He flooded the desks of sports editors with Leemans literature. On one occasion he devised a full newspaper-size page of lithograph work extolling the feats of Leemans with George Washington teams, incorporating the choicest of bouquets tossed at Leemans by Washington newspapermen who, almost exclusively, were acquainted with his talents. Espey's frantic efforts to win national attention for Leemans began to make talk.

Wherever newspapermen met—at the Army-Navy game, at Minnesota-Pittsburgh battles, at Harvard-Yale classics, sports editors began to inquire: Who is this guy Leemans?" And then, as an afterthought, "And, by the way, who is this fellow Espey who has gone nuts on the subject of trying to put Leemans over in the newspapers?"

They laughed him off. They laughed both Espey and Leemans off. They put him down as an overzealous press agent who was crazy enough to think that he could put Leemans over in that fashion. Why, what had Leemans ever done except, perhaps, run wild against a lot of bush colleges that George Washington had on its schedule?

Espey's Leemans literature probably did, in fact, react very much against Leemans. His persistency in attempting to sell Leemans to sportswriters throughout the Nation had a tendency to sour the press on the George Washington lad. Espey's zeal was commendable, but it was in a hopeless cause. There were too many big-shot football players throughout the land to warrant any consideration to a guy named Leemans down in Washington, D. C.

The United Press alone fell for Espey's stunts. At the end of the 1935 season, the U. P. made so bold as to name Leemans to its third All-American team. Whether it was the result of the Espey pressure, a genuine sympathy for Espey's efforts, or perhaps an honest appraisal of Leemans' talents is debatable. Anyway, it was some kind of a triumph for Espey.

That mention of Leemans perhaps was the first intimation to the Nation's football fans that there was a guy named Leemans who perhaps was a pretty good football player. The Espey literature to the press of the country had regularly found its way into waste baskets and the sole mention of Leemans by a national critic had been a piece deploring the high-pressure measures of college publicity men who sought to stampede their favorites into All-American mention.

So, it was some surprise that the 76,000 persons at Soldiers Field the other evening and the critics in the press box discovered that that fellow Leemans was in the College All-Stars' line-up. How he got into the game, much less the stadium, was something of a surprise, what with the big-shot stars from the breadth of the land at the disposal of Coach Bernie Bierman.

But that is another story—the story of how Leemans' young friends on the Washington playgrounds, where he was an instructor, flooded the city with ballots that helped to elect Leemans to the All-Star squad.

Out there on Soldiers Field Wednesday evening the critics who came to cheer for Berwanger, Shakespeare, Levoire, Millner and the rest stayed to cheer for Leemans, and to marvel. You know what happened out there, how Leemans, from the bush college, piled thrill upon thrill, sensation upon sensation for the 76,000 and galloped away with the individual honors that were supposedly reserved for his more famous colleagues.

But did you know that up there atop the stands in the recesses of the press box a little tyke of a man was registering no surprise at all? Because it was old stuff to him. You see the little man knew all about Tuffy Leemans, because the little man was Jack Espey, who had been scooping the world on Leemans' talents for three years though he hadn't been getting a tumble. Tuffy Leemans was running for Jack Espey that night.

G. U. Workout Lure for 50 Gridmen

Rain Cuts Short Drill at Hilltop; Two Sessions Scheduled Today.

Some rain fell into the lives and on the unprotected heads of Georgetown's football squad yesterday at the Hilltop, marring the Hoyas' first workout of the season, but, to coin a phrase, it failed to dampen Coach Jack Hagerty's enthusiasm or that of the players.

Enthusiasm is running rampant at the historic old school, and an air of confidence is sucking out the musty and stagnant gloom of bygone days when Georgetown was engulfed in football's quagmire, like a new-fangled air-conditioner. Only 44 men were expected for yesterday's drill, but 50 appeared, and all seem to think the Blue and Gray will wave triumphantly this year.

Cummings Packs Weight.

The one discordant note in the proceedings was occasioned by the appearance of young "Cy" Cummings. Everybody but Master Cummings reported in excellent physical condition and he hove into view with some 230 pounds packed sausage-like in his tights. Hagerty, who has big plans for the little fellow, made a few mental notes, one of which is believed to call for a couple of laps around Laurel's mile race track for the culprit.

As noted above, rain fell at the Hilltop and abruptly terminated the team's practice. George Murtagh, assistant coach, had just put the boys through limbering up exercises when Jupe Pluvius appeared out the West and sprayed his blessings on the gathering. Rather than risk sore muscles, lame backs and a thousand and one other ailments rain on opening day can bring, Hagerty decided to postpone real action until today.

This morning's session will begin at 9:30 o'clock, while the afternoon workout is scheduled for 2:30. All players and coaches are urged to attend.

Browns Defeat Athletics, 3-2, On Two Hits

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Sept. 3.—The St. Louis Browns got only two hits off Herman Fink and Randall Gumpert today, but came from behind to beat the Athletics again, 3 to 2.

Fink pitched perfect ball for five innings, then walked Hemsley to start the sixth. Carey hit to Higgins at third for an apparent double play, but Niemiec dropped the throw at second and both men were safe. Coleman batted for Andrews and walked, filling the bases. Lary flied to Johnson, Hemsley scoring. After Clift flied out, Solters singled to left for the Browns' first hit, scoring Carey.

Out Fishin' . . . . .

By Jack Hawley.

For the past two years this column has made every effort to suppress the illegal use of the gill net in the Chesapeake and its tributaries. During June we published a complete list of Maryland State patrol boat stations and their captains. On June 26 we were advised by the Maryland State conservation department of the following: "Our patrol system is now in full operation, and we are hearing from these boats and good results can be expected from this plan." We don't know what the plan is, but it has "flopped" completely, if our week of "snooping" is any indication of the absence of patrol boats on the scene of activity.

However, we did have early hopes that the patrol boats would go to work and do something for the protection of our game fishes as well as for residents of Maryland, the District and adjacent territory. Maryland anglers ought to get together and call many facts to its Legislature's attention if they expect to save their salt-water game fishing from the laxity of the law and annihilation by illegal netters.

The gill law is all wet because it allows too much leeway for the crook; the yardage is too long and the depth too great. We looked at 35-foot gill nets that are nearly twice the water's depth on Southwest Middles. Their length is a thousand feet or more, mostly more. What chance has any game fish under such deplorable conditions, even if used legally. We have seen many gill nets set on the Chesapeake, but never one set in a legal manner. It's just an excuse around the law and politics for the angler to pay the bill, which he does and always will.

Receiving complaints from anglers on their experiences with netting operations can bring but one reply—notify the authorities. We tried it ten days ago and then proceeded down to the scene of activities to see if the authorities kept their promise to be on the grounds with patrol boats and arrest the violators if caught illegally laying their nets.

The first day we counted four netters on S. W. Middles at 6 a. m. At 8 o'clock three more arrived from Smiths Island way. We waited and no patrol boats showed and none for several days, and still they haven't arrived. All this after the writer had phoned registration number and names of violators, their residences, etc., to assist the Maryland State conservation department catch the illegal netters.

Where do you suppose the patrol boats were all this time? At Solomons Island, where we were informed by one of the most reliable boatmen there that boats without lights or proper equipment would pass the anchored patrol boat without being stopped and proceed into the night to their destination. That is almost as good as watching a Federal boat buy bluefish from an illegal netter on S. W. Middles last week.

Personally, we believe the anglers are up against a hopeless situation which will continue. Nothing is being done to stop illegal netting. If the Maryland State conservation commission has any doubts regarding the destruction (illegal) of our bluefish we hereby offer this invitation to all its members: The writer will set the day for the fishing trip to S. W. Middles, furnish the boat, the camera, all tackle, etc., providing the commission will furnish the motion-picture film. We'll guarantee to show you what your boats have failed to show you, the most notorious netter on the bay. In addition, your patrol boats must not be notified of the day set for the fishing trip, nor be in the vicinity of S. W. Middles. Finally, invite Gov. Nice to view the picture.

Here is an example of what happened a few days ago: Illegal netter (number known) crossed the bow of Capt. Emory Evans, St. Jeromes Creek, Md. He netted 600 large bluefish which would average 5 lbs. each or 3,000 lbs. Evans' party cussed and so did Evans but it availed them nothing because the netter wiped out the entire school. These fish probably brought $300 on the fish market in Baltimore. During the time this happened there were 30 boats fishing on S. W. Middles at $10 per boat hire, or $300 spent by anglers to catch a half-dozen blues per boat, if lucky.

Very few fish were caught that day, none from the big school which was netted. Conditions like this one just about kills the angler's desire to continue fishing on the Middles. The boat captain realizing this wants to see the netting stopped. We all do. We often see the netters make several hauls in one day when as high as 100 fishing boats are on the water. If a comparison of fish sale against boat hire is made one can readily see what is going to happen to both the fish and the boatmen. We will lose the fish and the boatmen will be looking for other waters or another kind of work. The State is the real loser because she gets nothing from the netter but a "snicker." We believe Maryland should protect her own boatmen and give them a chance to lay a small sum away for the coming winter, which, if equal to last, will prevent these men from oystering, their winter livelihood.

Yankees Pound Feller, Down Tribe, 6-4

Boost Lead to 17 Games as Gomez Wins 11th; 5 Runs in First.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 3.—The Yankees found Bob Feller, the boy strikeout sensation, just another pitcher with a fast ball today and clubbed him off the mound in one inning for a 6-to-4 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

The win boosted their American League lead back to 17 games, as Lefty Gomez, who survived one bad inning, chalked up his eleventh win against seven setbacks.

Five Estimates Agree on Vast Corn Crop Ruin

Smallest Yield in Over 50 Years Indicated by Figures.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 3.—A consensus of five private crop estimates made public on the Chicago Board of Trade today indicated a 1936 domestic corn crop of 1,416,000,000 bushels, 23,000,000 bushels below the latest Government figures, and the smallest crop in more than a half century.

Contrary to the expectations of many traders, the crop estimates showed a general decrease in corn prospects during August from drought despite reports that recent rains had benefited the crop in some sections where growth was late.

The average of the five estimates was 156,000,000 bushels below the average of the same authorities just a month ago. The indicated production of corn this year compared with a crop of 2,291,000,000 bushels produced in 1935 and 1,478,000,000 produced in the previous year of great drought—1934.

Oats Yield High.

The oats crop forecast, however, indicated a production of 786,000,000 bushels, 14,000,000 more than the August 1 Government production estimate of 772,000,000. Last year the oats crop totaled 1,196,000,000 bushels.

The five grain authorities whose estimates were released were H. C. Donovan, R. O. Cromwell, Nat C. Murray, A. W. Snow and Mrs. E. K. Miller.

The final result of the 1936 crop year, Snow said, is the largest area of complete crop failure this country ever has experienced. His report, he contended, confirms the tremendous drought losses of the current season and shows there was no relief of importance during August. Snow placed the condition of corn at 39.7 per cent of normal, the lowest ever reported. The lowest corn crop estimate of the five was made by Donovan, who said the indicated crop was only 1,360,000,000 bushels. Cromwell said the low point in the season's progress of the crop came in mid-August.

The average of the estimates of production of spring wheat in the three Canadian prairie provinces was 218,000,000 bushels, compared with 206,000,000 a month ago and a crop of 272,000,000 last year.

Government Pays 17.5% Of U. S. Income

Proportion Is More Than Double Figure of Year Ago.

New York, Sept. 3.—To an increasing degree since 1929 the Government has supplanted private industry as a source of the incomes realized by the individuals of the United States, according to an analysis made public today by the National Industrial Conference Board.

The board's study, "National Income and Its Elements," presents estimates showing that income derived from Government sources, which accounted for 8.5 per cent of the total in 1929, had increased in proportion to 17.5 per cent by 1934. Sums derived from Government amounted to $6,820,000,000 in amount from private industry and 1929 and $9,354,000,000 in 1934, an increase of 37 per cent, while the occupations sources dropped from $73,209,000,000 in 1929 to $41,545,000,000 in 1934 or 43 per cent.

Between 1933 and 1934 total realized income showed an increase of $6,259,000,000, according to the conference board's estimates. Twenty-five per cent of that increase, however, represented increased governmental disbursements. Any increases in national income since 1934 must likewise be attributed in part to governmental spending chiefly from borrowed funds as well as to improvement in the productive activity of private enterprise. Increased expenditures for relief in 1935 and payment of the veterans' bonus in 1936 will be reflected in any estimates of realized incomes for these years.

It is also pointed out by the conference board that its estimates of national income are made in terms of current dollars and do not take into account the effect of rising prices upon the purchasing value of that income.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Price Changes Narrow in Less Active Trading; Government Bonds Steady.

New York, Sept. 3.—Stocks disappointed some of their more enthusiastic followers by not moving up rapidly on a succession of favorable indications for the election, but regrets were not overwhelming, as all the news published today had been anticipated. Government bonds held firm on the Treasury's financing proposals. Commodities rallied. September wheat rose a cent to 109⅞ cents a bushel. Turnover in stocks was smaller at around 1,100,000.

Most of the trade news of mid-week was exhausted yesterday. The overnight contribution to market factors, namely, the Literary Digest's poll of Eastern States on the Presidential election, turned out to be highly favorable to Landon, easily the favorite of the financial district. However, the figures already had been well circulated about the Street, and the result was that the market had caught up with them.

Public speculation in stocks has been dull for a long time, and it is unlikely to increase until the professionals themselves hit up the stroke. Speculative attention is directed mainly to the groups of industries operating at rising or well-maintained rates. Shortly more will be known on how far the drought is cutting into autumn trade, how much the season is helping business to rise from the settling down that always occurs in the summer, and, most important, estimates of third-quarter earnings will appear.

While having to wait until next week for the details of the refunding issues which the Treasury will offer to retire its maturity of $514,000,000 in the third quarter tax date, the financial section had confirmed its guess that the Treasury would ask for more cash at this time. The intention of Secretary Morgenthau to raise $400,000,000 came as no surprise. Official hints had been given, when attention was drawn to the postponement of collection for windfall (processing) taxes and the increased outlay for drought relief—to say nothing of election strategy.

Government bonds were unmoved by the news and there was no reason why they should have been. What is of more interest to the market is the amount of new bond issues that will be floated in the next six months or year. Certainly few believe that the Treasury will require (including the current call for $400,000,000) only $750,000,000 in new cash to the end of the fiscal year. Equally certain is the outlook for a much larger actual Treasury deficit than the $2,000,000,000 predicted by the Administration.

An addition in this fiscal year of perhaps three billions to the public debt (i. e., to bank and insurance company extension of credit to the Government, along with rising industrial activity, sharply mounting commodity prices and a steadily advancing stock market, a promise at least of no addition to taxation, all indicate that the country is jogging along the road toward inflation.

Stocks were conspicuous only for their narrow price range. Only a handful of stocks were able to move more than a point in either direction. Most of the business was done in a few low-priced shares, Steel opened with a fractional gain, but slowly gave it up. Bethlehem, a recent favorite, lost a point or so. Inland and Crucible were higher. Most of the rails softened a little. Delaware & Hudson was an exception. In the early deals Central duplicated the year's best price.

Mack Trucks sold at a new high price, but other motor shares were inclined to sag. Rail equipments were mixed. That was true of the oils, utilities, foods, metals (where Nickel was strong), merchandising shares and the mail orders.

Stocks able to move up and stay there pretty well were Atlantic Gulf, du Pont, Eaton (well advertised by market letter), General Outdoor A, Vadsco preferred, Ward Baking preferred, Union Bag and the various classes of Worthington. Nickel's rise amounted to more than a point, with platinum for a base.

Home Owners.

In announcing plans for September financing the Treasury suggested that the $400,000,000 of cash to be raised was necessary to take care of Home Owners Loan requirements. People here who are familiar with current operations of HOLC were puzzled by the intimation that so much money would be needed. They estimated the year's requirements at no more than $100,000,000, based on the recent rate of outlay. They felt that the Treasury was intending to spend $300,000,000 for some purpose under cover of HOLC. Incidentally, the public wouldn't mind having a few figures on HOLC delinquencies.

HOLC Record.

Secretary Morgenthau's reference to the HOLC started some delving into the latest balance sheet of the home saving organization. While it is obviously impossible to tell the entire story from the figures given, the corporation on June 30 had cash with the Treasury and in banks amounting to about $39,000,000 and $57,680,000 of interest receivable. Interest payable, thanks to the Government guaranty, was less than the interest receivable, at $21,390,000. The "reserve for uncollectible items" amounting to $58,404,399 exceeds the entire interest receivable and suggests strongly that while the corporation is debited with interest, it cannot collect enough to offset.

On $3,044,949,000 of funded debt interest can pile up with surprising rapidity. The corporation's original $200,000,000 capital has been impaired to the amount of $34,000,000 since it began business.

Nine Long Years.

Imminent completion of the reorganization of Wickwire Spencer Steel will close one of the longest industrial bankruptcy cases now in the courts. The company was formed by a consolidation in 1920, but had to be reorganized in 1925. In October, 1927, receivers were appointed. After enactment of section 77B of the bankruptcy act the company switched to proceedings under that law. The present plan is the result of amendments to a plan dated originally May 27, 1929. Holders of the common will receive only rights to purchase one new share of common at $15 for each ten shares held. When issued the new common is quoted around 14⅜ to 14¾. The old shares, fortunately, were dropped by the Stock Exchange in November, 1927.

Company Earnings.

Except for the railroad reports covering August operations, which will begin to appear after Labor Day, the market will have to worry along on third-quarter estimates only during the remainder of the month. Important industrial and utility company reports for second quarter have virtually completed publication of their earnings figures, and any stragglers will find that the market has ceased to think about what happened so long ago as the first six months. Current activity and strength among the railroad and steel shares reflect the market's expectation of even better reports for those groups in third quarter than were had for second quarter.

D. C. Clearings Continue Gain Over Year Ago

Volume Is $82,745,029 for August, a rise of 9.5 Per Cent.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

August bank clearings in Washington recorded another substantial gain. The monthly report made public this week by Manager George H. Bright of the Washington Clearing House Association revealed August clearings amounting to $82,745,029.41, as against $75,543,871.82 in the month last year, an advance of $7,201,157.59, or about 9.5 per cent.

Mr. Bright's statement reflects steady business gains locally in spite of the recent hot weather and seasonal lull. Clearings for August and the first eight months of 1936 are compared below with those of the corresponding months a year ago.

Banking Notes.

Resignation of Ralph M. Wolfe as manager of the local office of Mackubin, Legg & Co. was announced this week. Mr. Wolfe, now on a month's vacation, will go into business for himself. Well known in local financial circles, he is a former president of the Ticker Club of Washington and a member of the Bond Club of Washington. Charles B. Quarles, assistant manager of the Washington office of Mackubin, Legg & Co., is now acting manager. The firm, founded in Baltimore, has memberships in the New York, Washington and numerous other prominent stock exchanges.

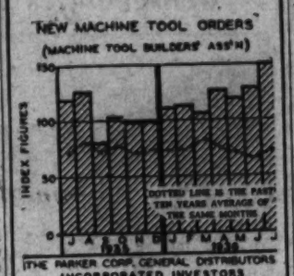
July Tool Orders Set 7-Year Peak



Boston, Mass., Sept. 3.—New machine tool orders were at the highest rate in July of any time since 1929. They passed a year ago by 25 per cent, and were 20 times the depression low. Many manufacturers report orders on hand for six months ahead. It is estimated that about 10 per cent of the machine tools are for foreign shipments.

Foreign Markets Advance Grains

Chicago, Sept. 3 (AP).—Strengthening developments in the world wheat situation had a constructive influence on the wheat market here today and prices rose at times more than a cent. Higher prices in foreign markets, cables said, were influenced by reports of good sales of Danubian wheat to Italy, of suspension of export permits for wheat by the Rumanian government and of better export business in Canadian grain.

Wheat closed 1 to 1½ higher, compared with yesterday's finish; September 1.09⅞ to 1.10; December, 1.08½ to 1.08¾, and corn was ⅜ to 1½ up; September, 1.06 to 1.06⅛; December, 93¼ to 93⅝. Oats gained ¾ to ⅞; rye, 1¾ to 1⅞; barley, 1½ to 2, and provisions were unchanged to 15 cents higher.

Balances Rise $109,000,000 In Past Week

Circulation Up 41 Million; Gold Stocks Climb to 10.717 Billion.

By the Associated Press.

A $109,000,000 rise in member bank reserve balances during the week ended September 2 was reported last night by the Federal Reserve Board.

The increase in member bank deposits to $6,441,000,000 was accounted for in part by a $71,000,000 drop in Treasury cash and deposits with Federal Reserve banks, bringing the latter figure to $2,482,000,000 on September 2, or $264,000,000 below the same week a year ago.

The Treasury withdrawals resulted in their dissemination in channels of trade and commerce, through which they found their way into banks, and, in turn, were deposited to reserve accounts.

In its weekly statement, the Federal Reserve Board also noted a $57,000,000 decrease in nonmember deposits and other Federal Reserve accounts, bringing these to $535,000,000.

Another factor in the $109,000,000 increase in reserve balances was a $41,000,000 upturn in money in circulation to $6,225,000,000.

Monetary gold stock increased $22,000,000 during the week to $10,717,000,000. This was $1,508,000,000 over the same week a year ago.

Brokers' Loans Rise $13,000,000 in Week

Loans on securities to brokers and dealers, held by weekly reporting member banks in New York City, were reported yesterday by the Federal Reserve Board to have totaled $984,000,000 for the week ended Wednesday, an increase of $13,000,000 for the week.

Loans for the corresponding week a year ago totaled $852,000,000.

Ahearn Seeks Sarron and Belloise

Rival Champions Offered October Match; Everett May Face Gallagher.

Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn yesterday wired Mike Belloise, New York featherweight champion, an offer to meet Petey Sarron, world's featherweight champion, at the Griffith Stadium the first week in October.

Sarron is recognized as the world's champion in all sections except New York. Mike Belloise is recognized only in New York. Sarron's manager, Jimmy Erwin, advised the local matchmaker that Sarron would meet the New York challenger if he could be enticed here the first week of October. Ahearn immediately wired Belloise offering him the bout.

For some reason or other the New York Commission has refused to recognize Sarron as the champion, but preferred Belloise. In order to clear up the situation, Sarron and his manager agreed to take on the New Yorker and give him a chance to prove his claim to the title. It is now up to the New York State challenger to either agree to meet the National Boxing Association champion or else withdraw.

Erwin stated the match should be staged in Washington, as it will draw a larger gate here than in New York. Belloise has proven in his last fights in New York that he is not an attraction in his home State.

If efforts to sign Belloise are unsuccessful, Sarron and his manager, accompanied by his stablemate, Buck Everett, plan to leave for the Pacific Coast the first week in October.

2 Senior Teams In Semifinals Of Doubles

Two senior teams advanced to the semi-finals, and half a quarter-final junior match was completed yesterday in the playground boys' tennis doubles tournaments before rain halted the proceedings at Chevy Chase playground. The favored team of Larry Licklighter and Ducky Cranston, of Virginia Avenue, and the Royal-Blanken team of Park View moved into the senior semi-finals.

Though only part of one junior match was finished, this more than made up for any thrills the others promised. The Jackson-Wadden combine from Georgetown led Mulvihill and McCarthy of Phillips, 5-1 and 40-love in the seventh game of the first set only to lose the set, 12-10. The Georgetown pair had set point in this set 19 times before they finally lost it.

The score in the second set was tied at 3-all when rain descended.

Cranston and Licklighter scarcely got warmed up in swamping Schwanner and Knott, of Hoover, 6-0, 6-0. Royal and Blanken had more difficulty with Johnson and Gilman, of Hamilton, but won in straight sets, 6—3, 6—4.

Morton Pointing For Amateur Bout

With an additional week in which to get himself into condition, as a result of the postponement of the bouts until next Wednesday, Mike Morton, hawk-nosed District lightweight champ, is expected to be one half of the show-stealing act when he tangles with Brooks Bowen, Richmond titlist, in the boxing card featuring District and Virginia amateurs at Seat Pleasant Stadium next Wednesday.

Morton, who won the Herald Golden Gloves Trophy, and was runner-up in the local A. A. U. tournament, has just returned from a vacation at a nearby beach, and needs only a little gym work to enter the ring in fine condition. His opponent brings a commendable record to the local stadium bearing championship laurels for the Virginia State featherweight, Richmond Golden Gloves featherweight, and Twenty-ninth Division lightweight titles.

Oates and Blueges Play For Peewee Ball Title

The Oates A. C. and the Ossie Blueges gained the finals of the city Peewee baseball championships yesterday and will play today on the Ellipse for the Washington title. Oates, champions of the Washington Boys Club League, defeated the Little Tavern Peewees, 3 to 2, behind the five-hit pitching of Kenny Usilton.

The Ossie Blueges tacked a 14-5 beating on the Cardinal Peewees to eliminate that team from the running. The Oates are seeking to gain the city title for the second straight year.

Miller Furniture Bows To National Savings, 3-2

National Savings & Trust Co., champions of the Bankers League of the Post Association, nosed out Miller Furniture, Industrial League champions, yesterday, 3 to 2, on the Ellipse in an exhibition game.

Freddie Burrell, National Savings Ace, won a mound duel from young Lefty Arnold Heft. Burrell held the Furnituremen to three hits while Heft yielded the Bankers five, two of them in the first inning when National Savings scored all its runs with the aid of Furniture errors.

By the Associated Press.

The pound gained ⅜ of a cent in New York to $5.03⅛. French francs were unchanged at 6.58½ cents, but Swiss francs gained .01 of a cent to 32.61 cents and Holland guilders lost .00½ of a cent to 67.91½ cents.

In London the dollar eased ⅜ of a cent to 5.03⅝ to the pound, compared with the overnight New York rate of 5.03⅛. The American unit in Paris closed at the equivalent of 6.583 cents to the franc, against the New York overnight rate of 6.585 cents.

2. Note the key letters and the number at the end of the ad. For example: D-5.

3. Then find the letter of the alphabet (in this case, D) at the top of the map. This means the apartment is located somewhere between the D at the top and the D at the bottom of the map.

4. Then look for the numeral (in this case, 5) at either side of the map. Where the D and 5 meet is the vicinity in which the apartment is located.

Dr. Cameron Given Leave at Hagerstown

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 3.—Dr. W. Ross Cameron, Washington County health officer, has been granted a six-month leave to accept an invitation from Johns Hopkins University to take advanced study and continue experiments he started here last year. The county commissioners granted him a leave and his place will be filled during his absence by the U. S. Public Health Service. Dr. Cameron will leave here September 15.

Held on Liquor Charge.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 3.—Eugene S. Stump, near Westminster, Md., was held on $500 bond for the action of the Federal grand jury on charges of violating the internal revenue laws when arrainged here before U. S. Commissioner D. Angle Wolfinger. Federal investigators from Hagerstown headquarters said that a raid on Stump's premises yielded a 150-gallon still and five gallons of liquor.

Six Alaskan Air Victims' Bodies Are Recovered

Rescuers Climb 2,000-Foot Ridge to Reach Them; Details Meager.

By the Associated Press.

Anchorage, Alaska, Sept. 3.—Rescuers toiled up a 2,000-foot ridge in the Skilak Lake region, 60 miles south of here today, to recover the bodies of four men and two women who died in an airplane crash Sunday.

In loss of life it was the worst Alaskan airplane tragedy on record.

The plane, piloted by Steve Mills, former Seattle flying instructor, was sighted from the air yesterday, a 4-mile hike from the nearest landing place. Fliers said the motor had thrust itself back into the fuselage and that the pontoons were smashed. There were no further details.

Were on Fishing Jaunt.

Cause of the tragedy was undetermined from the air, but it was known thick weather shrouded the district when Mills hopped Sunday to take his five passengers on a fishing jaunt.

The passengers, all of Anchorage, were Mr. and Mrs. George Markle, parents of 10-year-old Lou Ann Markle, patient in a Portland, Oreg., hospital; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Davis and Augustus Teik.

Teik and Davis were barbers; Markle an Alaska railroad employe.

Mills, widely known Alaskan "mercy flyer," leaves a widow and two children here.

Led by Elmer Simco, veteran Kenai Peninsula trapper and prospector, a rescue party established a base at a small lake near Skilak Lake. They operated from there today with the help of nine woodsmen.

News Kept From Girl.

News of the tragedy was kept from little Miss Markle, who is under treatment for a serious bone infection.

Her maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Rayssen, of Portland, said they would "just have to tell her that her mother and daddy won't be back for a long time."

Other survivors of Mrs. Markle are Maurice Rayssen, of Seneca Falls, N. Y., and Delmar Rayssen, of Bath, N. Y. Two other brothers live in Portland and a sister in Bremerton, Wash.

The tragedy occurred while rescuers were recovering the remains of four persons who burned to death in the crash of a plane between Fairbanks and Dawson more than a year ago. The wreckage was found only recently.

Mercy Flier Killed

STEVE MILLS,

Silo Gas Kills 2 Women, Girl Near Ellicott

Mother and Employe Die Trying to Save Child From Fumes.

Mrs. Hulver sent Mary Sian, the hired girl, to investigate.

The Sian girl, who had lived with the Richard family since she was 9, made her way into the pit. She seized little Anna and started up the ladder with her. Then the fumes overcame her and she toppled down to lie alongside the mother and Anna.

Two more victims almost were claimed by the poison-charged pit.

William Young, a milk truck driver from Frederick, heard the screams of bystanders and ran to the ice house. He climbed into the pit. Half way down, he turned a ghastly white. Others reached in and pulled him to safety.

Norman Becraft, a neighbor, aided in pulling little Anna to the surface with the ladder, and, when it was lowered again, descended into the pit again and attempted to lift Miss Sian. He felt himself fainting and managed to scramble out almost unconscious from the fumes. The neighbors who had gathered about managed to snag the mother and the Sian girl with hooks and hold them up while ropes were slipped around them to drag them from the death hole.

Meanwhile, calls had been put in for the fire rescue squad of Ellicott City, 18 miles away, and of Rockville, near Washington. Their efforts at resuscitation failed.

John Richard, husband of one of the victims and father of another, was working in a distant field, otherwise he, too, may have died in the pit. The only other member of the family, Calvin, 10, was on a trip with his uncle Floyd Hulver.

The three bodies, after being retrieved with hooks and ropes, were carried to the farm house, and later sent to the undertaking establishment of W. M. Waltz, at Winfield, 6 miles from here.

The Richard family came here from Mountain Falls, Va., near Winchester, about two years ago. The triple funeral will be held there tomorrow.

Oliver Holbrook, owner of the Holbrook Dairy, is married to Richard's sister.

Parents Sentenced.

Portland, Oreg., Sept. 3 (AP).—A mother and father, accused of beating their 13-month-old baby during a family quarrel, drew maximum sentences of six months in jail and $500 fines each today from Municipal Judge Julius Cohn.

Boy, 13, in Chicago On Mercy Errand

Chicago, Sept. 3 (AP).—Maurice Oldham, a husky-looking young Kentuckian of 13 years, arrived today on a Samaritan's errand to offer his blood in an effort to save a 7-year-old Chicago lad—and see a ball game.

He came with his mother, Mrs. R. Mack Oldham, of Lexington, Ky., on an afternoon train in response to an appeal from the parents and physician attending 7-year-old Philip Levitt, ill from the dread viridans type of streptococcic infection.

Maurice, son of a Lexington city commissioner, once suffered from the same malady, but recovered. Philip's physician, Dr. Paul Sahlin, believed blood from the Kentucky lad—charged with infection-fighting elements—may cure his patient. Data exchanged by mail indicated Maurice had the right type of blood for the attempt.

"I am glad to come and do anything I can to help the Levitt boy," said Maurice. "I wanted to come to help, but I also wanted to see a big league ball game."

Norway Refuses To Expel Trotzky

Oslo, Norway, Sept. 3 (AP).—Norway tonight formally rejected Russia's demand for the expulsion of the exiled Bolshevist leader, Leon Trotzky.

A note handed to the Soviet minister at Oslo said the Russian demand was not in conformity with "the existing friendly relations between the two countries."

The note declared Norway had not been lax in preventing "any actions organized on her territory which may threaten the security of other nations."

Russia, on August 29, formally asked the expulsion of Trotzky, who, on Wednesday, was interned with his wife on the proviso that he would not conduct any counter-revolutionary activities in Russia or in other countries.

Two-Trouser Fall

SUITS

Sheldon steps to the fore again. This time in an ADVANCE ANNUAL SALE OF TWO-TROUSER FALL SUITS that means an actual savings to you. By savings we mean that we purchased the woolens months and months ago, even before you had thought of taking off your winter suit. This gave us a chance to become one-up on the retailers who are in the markets now. Then we consulted the leading men's stylists and obtained their views for the coming season. The result is one of the outstanding suit values of the season. We're featuring Glen Plaids in subdued and bold patterns, stripes and tartan checks. Plenty of plain shades, too. Single and double breasted Drape and Lounge models. Sport models. Pleated models. In fact, every desirable fabric and fashion for the fast approaching Fall season.
